'We're just half crazy,' says 87-year-old bather

GOOSE BUMPS rode piggy back on goose bumps Monday as some 70 shivering souls braved the 8 a.m. morning chill to join in the 51st annual George Washington's Birthday Swim at the beach club at Pebble Beach. "We're just half crazy," said the eldest bather, Dr. Raymond E. Brownell, 87, an orthodontist from Carmel. He said he had taken the plunge every year since the crazy rite began in 1928.

Before taking it, however, several swimmers braced themselves with Coffee Royale, according to Dr. Brownell. "That's coffee with a shot of bourbon," he confessed. "It raises the spirits and get you going."

The birthday swim started as an eye-opening prelude to a golf tournament at the Monterey Peninsula Country Club, according to the doctor. "We did it at Point Joe, but after two or three of the fellows almost drowned, we moved it over to the beach club," he said.

Dr. Brownell and Ted Durein, a retired newsman also from Carmel, wore old-fashioned bathing suits that provided more body coverage. Both men are cofounders of the zany event and apparently have learned the best way to minimize the big freeze.

Younger bathers, however, eschewed the long-john fashions and invaded the frigid surf in swim trunks and, as the case might be, bikini tops.

Inn not in

Dear Editor:

The environmental impact report for the Marriott Inn near the mouth of Carmel Valley has been approved by the County Planning Commission. Many people say that this signals the eventual approval of the project. But how many of us know that acceptance of an EIR is based on whether the report is complete, not whether the impact is to be good or bad.

Based on current thinking, a complete EIR showing a negative impact on the environment could be approved and be a major step toward acceptance of the project. While an incomplete EIR indicating negligible impact on the environment could be rejected.

The complete, and therefore approved, report for the Marriott project has all the facts about air pollution to be caused by the out-of-town cars, buses and trucks servicing the 376-room tourist resort.

How could the project be approved on this basis alone?

Council jesters

Dear Editor:

It would seem to me that one of the primary objectives of a competent and conscientious city government would be to establish and maintain a harmonious relationship between the residents and the business community, for they are the amalgam of the community, mutually dependent upon one another, and therefore cannot survive without each other.

Instead of seeking this harmonious relationship, our mayor, Gunnar Norberg, and his puppets, Mike Brown and Helen Arnold, initiate, foster and nurture animosity and ill will between our residents and business.

Mr. Norberg is hypocritical, as his own local business only survives through tourism. He is in the unique position of exporting tourists so he is able to sit smuggly in his lofty position and sneer at those whose living depends on whomever enters their establishment, be they local or transient.

I hope that the clients of Norberg receive more gracious treatment in their travels than the unsuspecting guests of our lovely city, upon whom Messrs. Norberg and Brown and Mrs. Arnold turn their wrath.

And what of us, the guileless merchants of Carmel — are we to ask for proof of residency of those who cross our threshold, or treat them with the same courtesy which we in turn expect when we travel?

The vast majority of us in this sophisticated community have experienced broad travel. Why, then, should we excoriate those who wish to pause in Carmel and vicinity to enjoy briefly the great beauty with which we are so abundantly endowed?

Mr. Norberg himself emigrated here. Now that he has become king of his little realm, he and his two court jesters seek to prevent anyone else from entering the city gates. It is a preposterous example of pomposity.

Nobody in Carmel should consider voting in the coming election if he has not attended some of the City Council meetings to witness what goes on there.

Adams replies

Dear Editor:

An open letter to Paula Walling:

I appreciate the candor and obvious sincerity of your open letter to me, dated Jan. 25, and which I noted was published in the last issue of the Carmel Pine Cone.

I must say, however, that your extraordinary misunderstanding of facts and political possibilities astonishes me, especially in regard to the use of public land when dedicated to protection and appropriate recreation. Your letter reveals a monumental ignorance or indifference to the elements of public-land law and the history of land preservation in America.

I have a personal preference, but certainly not a closed mind on what agency or agencies would most properly administer the available land. My prime objective is to save what can be saved of our section of the California coast from excessive development.

This beautiful region is of such importance to our county, the state and to the nation as a whole that every effort must be made to assure the protection of its essential qualities for all foreseeable time to come.

I stand firm in this conviction, which is shared by many of my friends and colleagues.

Ansel Adams

. . . rebuttal

Dear Mr. Adams:

I appreciate that you are groping with the same problems we in Big Sur have been pondering for some time.

You will find, as we have, that the answers to preservation of the coast are complex. Naive, simplistic thinking offers no solutions. It takes arduous and specific planning. Giving the job to someone else won't work, unless you like having someone else do all your thinking for you.

A national park will ultimately destroy more land than it will preserve.

Private meetings cannot answer public problems. We stand a chance of preserving the coast for many future generations only if we all work together.

"The elements of public-land law" for the future have yet to be written. And it is not the "history of land preservation in America" that counts, but the future of it — a future which is only as stable as our economy.

I may not be in a position to recognize "monumental ignorance" when I encounter it at such close range; however, I do know that writing to such a gentleman as yourself hardly constitutes "indifference." Nor does taking the time to attend meeting after meeting on the subject of coastal preservation and planning.

I think you would have a hard time finding indifferent people in Big Sur. I challenge you to call a meeting (such as you and Mr. Owings held at MPC). You will fill the hall — and to your great delight you will find a room filled with people wanting "to save what can be saved of our section of the California Coast from excessive development," your "prime objective."

We apparently stand firm in the same conviction, one which is shared by my friends and colleagues as well.

A changing role for newspapers

By AL EISNER

THIS WEEK'S COLUMN should offer a little respite from the thunder and lightning of the last few weeks.

Judy (Mrs. Eisner) and I journeyed to San Diego last weekend for the annual convention of the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

Opinion

Several things happened: first, we learned that there are a lot of good newspapers published in California. Second, we learned that Gov. Jerry Brown has a very well-trained mind. And, third, we were refreshed by the three-day vacation and darn glad to be back in beautiful Carmel.

Getting a good look at the dozens of quality weeklies published in California was a little humbling for us, since we aspire to be the best of the lot.

Jerry Brown, for his part, handled himself superbly at a "reverse" press conference — a conference at which the press is questioned by the subject. Brown was trying to get a message across to newspaper people, but most of them weren't listening.

He asked representatives of major newspapers what preparations they were making to accommodate the information explosion. Most newspaper publishers, of course, are secure in their belief that their newspapers are institutions that will live forever, whether or not they serve the needs of their readers. Brown implied that the new electronic technology was usurping the news function and that the role of newspapers was changing. It is a view that we share.

We believe that the function of the daily (and the weekly) newspaper is to give meaning and depth to the "news." Television and radio news media can give us the outline of major news events minutes after they happen — sometimes even while they are happening.

The meaning behind those events — what they mean to the reader, can be supplied best by the printed media. Unless newspaper publishers begin to comprehend the radical changes taking place, they will witness a decline.

IF YOU ARE a registered voter in the City of Carmel, you ought to make an effort to read next week's edition of the Pine Cone. We will present in-depth interviews with the five candidates for three vacancies on the City Council. We also plan to offer an analysis of Proposition A — the ballot item that asks whether the mayor ought to be elected directly by the people or by the City Council.

You might be able to get an indication of how to vote by reading the article in this edition covering last week's Candidates' Night sponsored by the Carmel Citizens Committee. We hope that our interviews with the candidates next week will help you in making your choices. At this writing, we are still uncertain about the wisdom of endorsing candidates.

NOW THE GOOD NEWS: We learned yesterday that Tor House, the historic structure built by poet Robinson Jeffers in the early 1920s at Carmel Point, may be purchased by the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

Robertson Collins, a representative of the trust, will present a check for an option on the property to Donnan Jeffers (son of the famed poet) and his wife, Lee, tomorrow. That will be the prelude to a massive campaign to raise $340,000 to cover acquisition and restoration of the house that Jeffers built, stone by stone.

Photographer Ansel Adams, a friend of Jeffers since their first meeting in 1927, said: "I have personally responded not only to the sweep and grandeur of his imagination, but to the essential music of his style. We can hear the rhythm of the sea in his verse; its structure partakes of the granite rock on which he lived and with which he created his home and the fabled Tor House."

Surely, with all the wrangling going on in our little village, this is an issue around which all of us can rally. We'll give you more information in the coming weeks on how you might become a part of the movement to preserve a priceless monument to the indomitability of man.

Stay tuned.

With wife, two sons

Collins willing to move into Flanders mansion

CARMEL City Administrator Jack Collins says he wants to help the city out of a "pickle" by moving into the Flanders mansion Aug. 1 along with his wife and two sons. He proposes to open the mansion at the southeast end of the city to municipal use.

The proposal was contained in a memorandum dated Jan. 25, but not discussed by the Planning Commission until Feb. 15. The commission voted 6-0 to forward the proposal to its Land Use Committee for consideration. Commissioner Dr. Manfred Prescott was absent. The Land Use Committee includes commissioners Dr. Donald Davidson, Eileen Thompson and Commission Chairman Dorothea Roberts.

The city administrator was attending a conference in Pasadena and was not at the meeting.

"I don't really want to live there," Collins said Tuesday. He said he would be willing to move in with his family only "so that the Flanders house could finally serve a municipal purpose."

Collins has been looking for a house in Carmel since he assumed city administrator duties seven months ago. He is presently renting a house in an unincorporated area north of Carmel.

IN HIS proposal, Collins offered to pay $400 a month rent, the same rent current tenant Bradford Dow pays to the city. Dow has been renting the mansion as a private residence. His lease expires in August.

To satisfy the municipal use clause of the city-owned mansion, Collins has offered to open a portion of the home to four annual municipally sponsored events. This would include affairs like Bach Festival receptions and special city meetings.

"We will invest time and money to renew the grounds and house," Collins stated in his proposal. This would include painting the entire upstairs of the house, he noted. The city administrator also has offered to help care for a proposed city-owned greenhouse and nursery on the premises.

THE PROPOSAL stipulates that the City Council must annually appropriate "sufficient capital improvement funds" to bring the house into conformance with municipal building and fire codes.

"I have read files and minutes, listened to ideas privately and publicly and carefully read the Carmel Citizens Committee report on uses for the Flanders house," Collins stated in his memorandum.

The present rental arrangement serves no municipal purpose and selling the property would be shortsighted, Collins said. He objected to converting the mansion into a music school or senior citizens' home, due to a lack of parking, inadequacy of income and the exposure to vandalism.

Australian forester likes 'seedy' side of Carmel

By JIM BARRETT

DR. KEN ELDRIDGE is scheduled to board a jet bound for Australia next month. He will be carrying unusual baggage — one million seeds plucked from pine trees in Carmel, the Peninsula and other coastal locales.

Eldridge, 43, is midway through a scientific expedition for the Australian government that so far has taken him to two of the three regions in the U.S. where native stands of Monterey pine exist. All three are along the Central California coastline.

To his delight, two-thirds of the native acreage is on the Monterey Peninsula and gave him occasion to visit Carmel, where pines outnumber people. "It is fascinating how this town was built around the trees," Eldridge said last week during a tour of native stands near Carmel.

The affable, rawboned Australian is a forest geneticist. His mission is to return with the type of seed experts believe will resist the diseases that could threaten the pulp and lumber industries of Australia and New Zealand.

He explained, "The seeds will be used for plant experiments to determine which Californian stands produce the best offspring and, further, larger plantations will be made of seed from each area to preserve these races and allow them to produce seed naturally.

"Breeders will be able to select good trees from these stands for producing genetically improved seed," said Eldridge.

IN AUSTRALIA, where 100,000 jobs are directly related to pulp and lumber, Monterey pines have been grown for over a century. But, because they are not native trees, they are vulnerable to insect infestation and fungi that conceivably could ruin commercial forests. "We are looking for hardier, faster-growing trees. Our Monterey pine have a narrow genetic base," Eldridge said.

Ironically, the first Monterey pine arrived in Australia from England. That was in 1857. "Don't ask me why. They were casual about record keeping, but the original trees definitely came from California," Eldridge said. Monterey pine also have been found, thriving in fact, on two islands west of Baja California, he added.

Eldridge is being accompanied by Tony Firth, a scientist with the New Zealand government. New Zealand, like Australia, seeks to strengthen its stock of Monterey pine. The pulp and lumber industry are the second largest employer in New Zealand.

Timing had been important to Eldridge before he came, because as the weather grows warmer, the pine cones open and squirrels feed on the exposed seed.

"We came to beat the squirrels, but we have been highly fortunate. The cones still are tightly closed. We want sound, closed cones," Eldridge explained. He said the trees are not damaged by the picking.

He and Firth have collected pine cones in the Swanton area, close to Ano Nuevo Beach in Santa Cruz County, and in the vicinity of Cambria, near San Simeon. Besides picking pine cones from two native stands in Carmel, they have been at work at Point Lobos, Pebble Beach, Asilomar and Jacks Peak. Later, they will go to Placerville, where seeds will be extracted from the cones by the U.S. Forestry Service.

At Pt. Lobos, a state reserve, only a small number of cones were taken and with a special permit, said Senior Ranger Larry Moore. The collecting was supervised by a ranger.

ELDRIDGE'S expedition is the first of its kind. On four other occasions dating back to 1931, the Australians have come here to take seeds back to their country, but the expeditions were not for commercial purposes, but rather for scientific research, he said. His mission is different because of the larger quantities taken and the wider scope of the expedition. Under the cooperative research pact with the U.S. government, the Forest Research Institutes of Australia and New Zealand are allowed to collect the seeds.

"If there is a message I could leave with the people in Carmel," said Eldridge, "it would be to encourage them to value these trees not only because of their beauty, but also because of the very limited number of areas where the native Monterey pine grow."

He praised the city for its protective attitude toward the trees and said he enjoyed the local tour of native stands conducted by City Forester Gregory D'Ambrosio.

How heavy are one million pine seeds? "I thought you might ask that one," said Eldridge with a grin. "One hundred pounds."

ON THEIR WAY to the native tree stands are Dr. Ken Eldridge, the Australian tree expert, and two aides from UC Berkeley, Karen Jerger and Marshall Lyons.

Public tour of Marriott site promised by county official

The next major step in the battle over the proposed Rancho Canada Marriott Lodge will come March 29, when the Monterey County Planning Commission is scheduled to consider granting a use permit for the complex near the mouth of the Carmel Valley.

Carmel area residents will get a chance to tour the development site, on the Rancho Canada golf course grounds, and question the developers prior to that meeting, according to Planning Commissioner William Peters. Supervisor Sam Farr, Peters and Commissioner Paul F. Patchick will be on hand with developers to answer questions, according to Peters. No date for the tour has been selected yet, however.

"We'll schedule it sometime in March," Peters said. "We'll shut down the golf course, take a couple hours and have the general public there to ask questions.

"There's been a lot of heat on this," Peters said. "I want people to know what the issues are."

He said it will be easier for the public to understand the implications of the project and question it by touring the site because "people can't relate as well from a map."

Nick Lombardo, president of the developer, Rancho Canada de la Segunda, Inc., also supported the idea of an on-site tour prior to the Planning Commission meeting, Peters said.

"I approached him after a meeting and he was amenable," he said, referring to Lombardo.

Gerald B. Dalton, the attorney representing Lombardo, said the development group will present architects' drawings and artists' renderings of some of the buildings at the tour.

The lodge would cover 271 acres and include a 376-room resort hotel, all but nine of the existing 36 holes on the Rancho Canada golf course, tennis courts and other recreational facilities.

The Monterey County Board of Supervisors accepted the environmental impact report on the project on a split 3-2 vote Feb. 14. Farr and Board Chairman Dusan Petrovic of King City, opposed the action.

No time has yet been set for the March 29 public hearing on the use permit, according to County Planning Director Edward DeMars. Commission meetings begin at 9 a.m. in the county courthouse, Salinas.

DeMars said his office has not made a recommendation on whether the permit should be granted or denied. He added that there will be a planning staff recommendation before the commission meets.

While a Planning Commission vote is required on the use permit application, observers expect the issue will be appealed to the Board of Supervisors if the permit is denied by the planners.

Post office designer hired

Construction of a new $1.4 million U.S. Post Office that will serve most of Carmel's unincorporated area could begin by June, according to Carmel Postmaster Frank Ledesma.

The U.S. Postal Service awarded a $49,488 architectural and engineering contract for the new facility to Sabastian J. Bordonaro Associates, of Carmel, Ledesma announced on Tuesday. The post office will be built on an 85,619-square-foot site at the northwest corner of Rio Road and Carmel Rancho Boulevard. The site was purchased for $428,095, according to Ledesma.

"We've waited a long time for this," Ledesma said. Construction could be completed in one year, he said. Bids for construction will be accepted when the design is completed, probably in about three months, Ledesma said.

The structure, including loading platforms, will cover 15,000 square feet. The facility will have about 1,000 boxes, service nine rural routes and handle 30,000 pieces of mail daily.

It will serve all of Carmel Valley and the coast south of Malpaso Creek, excluding the zip code area served by the Carmel Valley Village Post Office.

The new building will serve as the main postal department for the area. The present Carmel Post Office at Fifth and Dolores will remain open and be called the Carmel-by-the-Sea station.

The zip code served by the new facility will be 93922, which will cover all post office boxes and general delivery. Rural routes will be covered by zip code 93923. The city of Carmel zip code will remain 93921. The Carmel Valley zip code also will remain 93924, Ledesma said.

BOYLE RECEIVES a handshake and congratulations from Chief Ellis. With Ellis is Clyde Klaumann, the retired chief of the police department. Boyle's wife is at the right.

Police sergeant

'Pappy' Boyle retires after 21 years here

Friends and coworkers of Carmel Police Sergeant Walter P. "Pappy" Boyle honored the retiring 21-year veteran of the force Sunday evening. A total of 162 guests attended the dinner and dance at Rancho Canada Golf and Country Club.

Boyle, 56, retired last week. He had been the vice president of the Carmel Police Department Employees Association and one of the best-known policemen in Carmel.

Police Chief William Ellis pinned the traditional badge of retirement on Boyle in an after-dinner ceremony. Carmel Mayor Gunnar Norberg read a resolution from the City Council congratulating Boyle for his term of service.

Jorune "JJ" Jonikas, senior desk officer in the department and president of the police employee association, served as mistress of ceremonies. Among the gifts given to Boyle were a fishing rod and reel, a chair and a bait box.

A singing telegram arrived at the dinner and the bearer of the news sang a ditty to Boyle. Robert Bunch, senior resident agent in Monterey for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, read a letter of congratulations from the senior agent for the bureau in San Francisco.

Sheriff's Deputy Ron Qualls, president of the Monterey County Peace Officers Association, presented Boyle with a lifetime membership card in the association.

Asked how Boyle got his nickname, "Pappy," Ellis said, "Well, he was an Irishman and he was very good with kids. The name just kind of stuck several years ago."

Boyle and his wife, Charlotte, live in Carmel and have two children and eight granddaughters.

Candidates count 'Brownie points' at local forum

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

ALL FIVE City Council candidates counted up and rattled off what one of them called "residential Brownie points" at the candidates' forum sponsored by the Carmel Citizens Committee Thursday, Feb. 16.

An overflow crowd of 200 was forced to sit on tables and kneel on the floor at the All Saints' Church parish hall. The candidates are vying for three seats in the March 7 elections.

The race for the single two-year seat pits incumbent Helen Arnold against Dr. Francis Herrick, a retired professor. Running for the two four-year terms are incumbent Mike Brown, Planning Commissioner Dorothea Roberts, and businessman Howard Brunn.

Herrick took the term "residentially oriented candidates" to task. "If we are to award residential Brownie points, the highest score goes to Mrs. Roberts," he said. Mrs. Roberts has lived in Carmel 55 years, longer than any candidate, said Herrick.

The retired professor lashed out at the City Council and what he termed a "stacked" Planning Commission. He accused the two of "turning the city inside out."

His opponent, Mrs. Arnold, said there is an "ever-present danger" that the business community will be "moving out" to the residential areas of Carmel.

BRUNN SAID he wants to see "every daytime tour bus out of Carmel." His opponent, Mrs. Roberts, insisted she wants no expansion of the business district. Commenting on the Carmel Plaza, Roberts claimed, "There is nothing really the matter with it." She leases space for an art gallery there.

Brown said he is proud of the part he played in enacting "the strongest tour bus ordinance in the state."

The first speaker of an evening was Herrick. He said the City Council "needs to bring careful discussions to useful conclusions.

"I would never carry political issues over into personal felings," Herrick said.

Herrick blamed the City Council for the $500,000 budget increase in 1977. "It is easy to make commitments to all sorts of projects without adding them all up until budget time," he said.

The budget increase actually was $600,000, including the more than $140,000 added to the budget in November 1977. The department of streets and maintenance appropriation was up $100,000. The police department budget increased $78,000. Sunset Center's expenditures in-

Wording debate slows creation of R-4 zone

A SINGLE sentence in the proposed R-4 zoning ordinance could determine the future of its application in Carmel. The wording now specifies the zone could only replace areas zoned commercial. Councilman David Hughes has proposed that the R-4 zone, with limited commercial uses, could be applied to R-1 residential zones.

"The zone is proposed to replace lands zoned commercial," the present ordinance states.

Hughes wants that sentence omitted. City Planning Director Bob Griggs says the sentence is his "mistake." It will unnecessarily limit planning, he says. Planning Commissioner Dr. Donald Davidson says if the present wording is illegal in terms of proper zoning, he would vote to have it changed.

Planning Commissioner Leslie Gross says omitting the sentence could open the door to commercial establishments in areas now zoned residential.

As a result of the wording controversy, the Carmel 6-0 Feb. 15 to delay framing the language until City Attorney George W. Brehmer can offer a legal opinion. The commission wants to know if the present wording is too restrictive.

Under the present wording, the R-4 zone could not replace an R-1 zone. An R-4 zone would conditionally allow commercial uses such as pharmacies and doctors' offices. The zone would also permit apartments and condominiums.

If the sentence is removed, the R-4 zone could apply to any area of the city. No other zone is presently restricted to specific areas by the city code.

After the first reading of the R-4 proposal last week, the City Council asked the Planning Commission to consider applying R-4 zoning to areas other than those presently zoned commercial. The City Council voted 4-1, with Councilman Mike Brown voting no.

"I agree that R-4 zoning should be confined to the commercial area, but when you are creating a new zone, Planning Commission voted you should not restrict it to a specific area," Griggs said.

"You're in deep water and close to being tarred and feathered by suggesting commercial uses in the R-1 (residential) zone," warned Commissioner Leslie Gross.

Restricting zoning to a specific area is "poor planning," Griggs answered.

THE R-4 zone would include at least 14 land uses and 25 other conditional uses. The new zoning category is designed to allow more dwelling units, but it also could expand with special city approval to allow commercial establishments within its boundaries.

Commissioner Donald Davidson, co-author of the R-4 proposal along with Gross, said if the current wording of the ordinance could prompt a lawsuit, he would want it changed.

"Somewhere along the line, this (R-4 zoning) will be challenged. I want this to be as tight as it can be," he said.

"There is no way I'd wager my political future to allow commercial uses in the R-1 zone," Gross said.

SUPPLEMENT AND AMENDMENT OF AGREEMENT FOR SEWAGE DISPOSAL BY AND BETWEEN CARMEL SANITARY DISTRICT AND PEBBLE BEACH SANITARY DISTRICT.

THIS SUPPLEMENT and AMENDMENT, made by and between the CARMEL SANITARY DISTRICT of Monterey County, a Public Corporation, and the PEBBLE BEACH SANITARY DISTRICT of Monterey County, a Public Corporation, this 1st day of March, 1978.

WITNESSETH:

WHEREAS, the parties hereto have heretofore entered into an Agreement for construction, operation and maintenance of a sewerage disposal system, dated March 27, 1969;

WHEREAS, said Agreement was based on conditions and assumptions existing as of the date of the Agreement;

WHEREAS, the capital cost formulas contained in Section 6 of said Agreement were based on the assumption that 2,000,000 gallons per day of the capacity of the capital facilities would be utilized by the Carmel Sanitary District and 1,000,000 gallons per day of the capacity would be used by Pebble Beach Sanitary District;

WHEREAS, pursuant to review of the operating characteristics of the treatment and disposal facility of the Carmel Sanitary District, it has been determined by the California Regional Water Quality Control Board that the effective rated treatment capacity of the facility is two million four hundred thousand gallons per day of average dry weather flow;

WHEREAS, Section 14 of said Agreement related to costs of administration of the Carmel Sanitary District and Pebble Beach Sanitary District operation and provided that the distribution of costs should be determined by separate agreement;

WHEREAS, Section 28 of said Agreement provided that it might, from time to time, be changed, altered, amended or supplemented by and with the consent of the legislative or governing bodies of the parties to the Agreement;

WHEREAS, experience of the Districts in operations pursuant to said Agreement indicates the desirability of amendment and supplementation; and

WHEREAS, the public interest and convenience and necessity will be served thereby;

THEREFORE, IT IS AGREED:

1. The provisions of Section 6.C shall be amended to include the addition of the following paragraph to be known as 6. C-1:

6. C-1. The Carmel Sanitary District treatment and disposal facility has been re-rated to provide 2,400,000 gallons per day of maximum daily dry weather flow as set forth in the Carmel Sanitary District NPDES Permit Order No. 74-24 and amendments. The Carmel Sanitary District is entitled to 1,600,000 gallons per day of treatment capacity and Pebble Beach Sanitary District is entitled to 800,000 gallons per day of treatment capacity. The Carmel Sanitary District shall to the extent permitted by regulatory governmental agencies provide additional treatment and disposal capacity to Pebble Beach Sanitary District upon request. Pebble Beach Sanitary District and Carmel Sanitary District shall be responsible for the payment of all capital expenditures required for additional capacity pursuant to Paragraph 7 of the Agreement dated March 27, 1969, as herein amended.

2. The provisions of Section 6.G. shall be amended to read as follows:

6.G. PLANT AND FACILITIES, OPERATIONAL AND ADMINISTRATION COSTS: That the parties hereto shall pay their shares of the costs of maintenance and operation and of administration of plant and facilities in accordance with the provisions of Section 14 thereof, as herein amended.

3. The provisions of Section 7.D. shall be amended and supplemented to read as follows:

7.D. PLANT AND FACILITIES, OPERATIONAL AND ADMINISTRATION COSTS: That following the date hereof, the maintenance and operation and administrative costs of the plant and facilities for either or both of the Districts shall be calculated in accordance with Section 14 hereof.

4. The provisions of Section 14 shall be amended and supplemented to read as follows:

14. MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION AND ADMINISTRATION COST CALCULATION: That following the date of this Agreement, the costs of maintenance and operation and administration of the Carmel Sanitary District treatment and disposal facility to be paid by Pebble Beach Sanitary District shall be determined on the basis of adding a seven and one-half percent (7½ percent) factor to the Pebble Beach Sanitary District annual flow factor which resulting sum shall be multiplied by the total annual operating cost of the Carmel Sanitary District treatment and disposal facility. The flow factor shall be defined as the ratio of the total annual wastewater volume from the Pebble Beach Sanitary District which is treated and disposed of by the Carmel Sanitary District to the total annual wastewater volume treated and disposed of by the Carmel Sanitary District originating from all sources, as measured by Carmel Sanitary District.

The basis of determination provided herein shall be effective from the date hereof. In the absence of a determination to change said percentage, the percentage stated herein shall remain in effect. Thereafter the cost figures involved in the calculation of the percentage shall be reviewed at intervals of not less than one year upon written request of either of the parties hereto.

5. That, except as provided herein, all of the provisions of that certain Agreement by and between the parties hereto, dated March 27, 1969, shall remain in full force and effect.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have hereunto affixed their hands and seals the day first above written.

New fiscal officer simplifying 1978-79 budget

HIS DESK is a mess right now, but the new Carmel City finance director says he hopes to present a "clean" budget by July.

Douglas D. Peterson, 27, assumed his duties as the top city fiscal officer on Feb. 1. He replaced Ralph Cowen, 51, who held the post for two years before resigning.

Peterson, a bachelor, has been an assistant to the finance director in Salem, Ore., since 1973. One of his chief responsibilities there was budget preparation.

The new finance director comes here from a city with a population eight times that of Carmel and a budget about 20 times as large as the $2.6 million budget that Carmel has.

But the advantage here, he says, is that the city has dominion over its economy. "Carmel has control of its own financial destiny," Peterson says.

Where Salem was "extremely dependent on the ups and downs of federal funding," Peterson says Carmel can decide how to spend its own money. Carmel has long avoided federal grants.

The largest sources of municipal revenue come from hostelry, property and sales taxes, he said. Sales and hostelry taxes underwrite more than 40 per cent of the 1977-78 city budget, he noted.

"From a financial standpoint, Carmel is very dependent on its businesses," Peterson says.

A NATIVE of Tillamook, Ore., Peterson was raised in Salem and was a public administration major at the University of Oregon in Eugene. There he took two courses from a part-time teacher at the university named Jack Collins. Collins today is the Carmel city administrator, Peterson's boss.

The Carmel job offer was "unexpected," Peterson says. "I was not the teacher's pet. We never had a real close relationship."

But a close working relationship is imperative now, he notes, because the city budget depends on following the city administrator's directions.

His primary goal? "To present a budget to Carmel and the City Council with clear, straightforward information."

Narrative descriptions that explain where the money goes and visual items such as graphs can be used to make the budget easier to understand, says Peterson. "They are easier to read than just a mass of figures," he says.

Peterson's hiring is partly the result of a city audit completed in September by Haskins and Sells, a Salinas accounting firm. The report recommends reshuffling present finance and accounting duties and hiring an additional employee.

The departure of Cowen creates an opening that Peterson says will be filled before March 1.

How would Carmel be affected if Proposition 13, the Jarvis-Gann Property Tax Initiative, passes on June 6? "That's my next project," says Peterson. The proposed law could limit property taxes to 1 per cent of the full market value of property. The city currently collects $259,500 in property taxes.

The former Boy Scout troop leader and recipient of the Salem "distinguished service award" enjoys reading novels when he is not reading budgets.

Editorial

Dear Editor:

As a graduate of the Carmel Unified School system and as the mother of three children now enrolled at the three levels of schools in Carmel, I would like to give my reactions to Mr. Eisner's editorial in the Feb. 9 issue of the Carmel Pine Cone.

The back-to-basics movement has indeed hit Carmel schools, mostly because of parental pressure. But there are a few teachers and administrators and school board members whose more conservative philosophy also tends towards this feeling and these people are listening. I know, because I speak for a number of parents who've become involved with the schools in the last three years and who have seen results in our push for more basics. On all levels, curriculum reform is taking place which tends to cut down on the number of courses taught, stresses stronger teaching and accountability in basic fields of study and emphasizes articulation among the three levels of education.

Still, much has to be done. The important thing to realize, however, is that parent involvement and interest can and has made a difference. It's slow going, but I have found forums where I can express my opinions and ideas for change. If enough of us care and go to meetings (offered nearly weekly at every level and open to the public), we will see continuing change. There is a vast system to influence, but there are some outstanding and caring teachers and administrators in this system and they will listen. Otherwise we are short-changing a lot of kids, who, given too many choices when they are young, are robbed of more important choices later, when perhaps they find, at 17, they are really not prepared for college and wish they were.

Dear Editor:

Al Eisner's opinion in the Feb. 16 issue of the Pine Cone was a splendid evaluation of the psychosis that currently pervades the City Council of Carmel.

Mr. Norberg, Mr. Brown and Mrs. Arnold clearly demonstrate by their behavior that they are not interested in protecting the residential character of Carmel; rather, they prefer to annihilate the business interests in the city.

If they continue, the results will indeed be counter-productive. They will, quite simply, destroy the balance that has existed in harmony and good will among the residents, the visitors and the business people for many years. A balance that has been largely responsible for the so-called "character of Carmel."

Mr. Anderson and Mr. Hughes deserve the sympathy and gratitude of the community as they try valiantly to maintain a level of reality in the City Council meetings.

Thanks to Mr. Eisner for his thoughtful and incisive analysis of the "goings on" at city hall.

Dear Editor:

Your editorial in the Feb. 9 issue of the Pine Cone was most interesting and your points were well taken. However, I feel that more needs to be said.

In the years that I have been involved as a parent, at all levels in the Carmel Unified School District, I have found a great deal of sincere desire on the parts of most teachers, administrators and school board members to do the best job possible in educating our children. But I also have found a good deal of frustration as educators attempt to meet the demands of myriad state laws and ever-changing social theories about what children need to be taught in school.

The growing demands by parents for a back-to-basics approach to education may serve to unify the majority of parents and educators. The response of the Carmel schools, so far, to organized and well-thought-out proposals for stricter curriculum guidelines has been positive and encouraging. We are in a time of national transition regarding educational goals and the transition from idea to practical application necessarily takes time.

The big mistake that Carmel area parents make, in my opinion, is to assume that once they send their healthy children off to their upper-middle-class public schools in their pretty communities, everything good will naturally follow.

The job of being a parent does not end once one has fulfilled those prerequisites. A child's life is not necessarily enriched by the presence of white beaches, fields with horses and expensive shops. Our communities are as subject to the problems of urban society as downtown San Francisco. Drugs are readily available to Carmel area young people and there seems little community interest, with the exception of the public schools, in providing leisure time activities for our youngsters.

The task of every parent is to take an active role in the lives of his children and he must not assume that anyone else is going to do that job for him. If that means working with the schools to improve areas of education that he feels are weak, fine. But it also may mean becoming more aware of the kinds of community that his children come into contact with daily. If enough parents take a hard look at the kinds of education, both in and out of school, that children receive in Carmel and Carmel Valley, perhaps we can improve both.

It is easier for a spaced-out, lonely or confused kid to learn to read or to do geometry in Carmel than it is any place else. Such kids don't always come from uncaring or neglectful homes, but often from families that think all of their children's needs have been met by bringing them to live in this idyllic and beautiful place.

Endorsement

Dear Editor:

My husband and I had occasion to attend the last two meetings of the Carmel City Council, both of which included public hearings on two controversial plans for rezoning and restricting certain sections of downtown Carmel. The public hearings were required by law, but they were public hearings in name only.

The usual 3-2 vote of the City Council was in no way to be influenced by what anyone had to say. It was quite obvious that the outcome had already been decided by the usual majority of three, Norberg, Brown and Arnold.

The manner in which Mr. Norberg conducted those meetings was an insult to good government. Two ordinances which could have disastrous effects on downtown Carmel for years to come were ramrodded through for their first readings by the usual 3-2 vote, with Mr. Brown commenting that we can always reconsider these measures before the second reading to decide if we really want them.

Why the hurry if there are any questions at all?

I wish to commend Mr. Anderson and Mr. Hughes for their perseverance, good sense and gentlemanly manners when they have been frustrated at every turn for two years. These men have put up with mental and verbal abuse above and beyond the call of civic duty in the face of continuous childish, arrogant and ridiculous opposition.

I hope the voters of Carmel will seriously consider the candidates who are running for election on March 7. There is an unhealthy situation in the Carmel city government and all voters should be aware of it. The council majority is neither open-minded nor democratic. It has preconceived notions on what is good for Carmel and it is destroying the rights of the citizens by being autocratic and domineering. When the Planning Commission has been infiltrated by appointments of the majority of its members by this same City Council, how can representative city government exist? It is a stacked deck.

This is a plea to Carmel voters to put an end to the existing one-sided, steamroller type government. Also, beware of the "Old Carmel" group whose philosophy echoes the current council majority and backs Arnold, Brown and Brunn. Return fair, unbiased, representative government to Carmel by supporting Roberts and Herrick, who are both responsible citizens whose records speak for themselves.

On editorial

Dear Editor:

Thank you, Al Eisner, for making the Carmel Unified School District a newsworthy subject. For several years, taxpayers in this school district have tried to get more press coverage of board meetings. Some even have tried actually attending the meetings. Several times there have been large numbers of people present when items of general interest were discussed. At very few of these well-attended meetings was the instructional program discussed.

People have been made to feel by the administration and the board of this district that they have no right to become involved in the instructional programs or the budget decisions of the district. Members of the public are not experts, it is implied. As a result, most people don't bother to go to board meetings except when an emotionally charged side issue — one not having to do with money or academics — is to be discussed.

It is possible for people to exert influence in these peripheral areas. However, in areas of importance — what children will learn and what it will cost — propaganda, half-truths, misinformation and reams of educationese have replaced any sort of meaningful discussion or communication.

Every parent is the expert on his particular child. Every parent has the right to make decisions affecting his child's education and is the final arbiter of what his child is to learn.

Every taxpayer is the expert on his own taxes and should be able to have a good idea as to how the school district budget will affect his taxes.

"Back to basics" is a wonderful slogan. And that's all it is unless people take action on a few basics of their own:

• The superintendent of a unified school district does not make policy for that district. The elected school board members design policy. If they ask for expert help, the superintendent provides it. He is not a member of the board, he is the head of the paid staff of the district and is in charge of carrying out the policy decisions of the board.

• The board members are not members of an exclusive social club. They are elected representatives of the taxpayers — not just the parents, but the taxpayers of the district. As elected representatives, they are responsible and should be responsive to the people who elected them.

• "Basics" in this day and age comprise a volume of information and skills hundreds of times larger and more complex than anything with which we (the last "basically" educated generation) had to deal. Adults who are antagonistic to the idea that this generation of children will know more than they must re-examine these feelings and not use "back to basics" as a means for oversimplifying what is available to students.

• Money alone will not provide solutions. Sincere effort on the part of the Carmel Unified School District board members and administrators to inform themselves and incorporate the public in the decision-making process would be a step in the right direction. Sincere effort of the public to communicate in an informed manner with their elected and staff personnel would be another. These steps involve many changes in attitude on both sides and will not be easy.

It was very thoughtful of Mr. Vance Frasier, principal of River School, to extend an invitation to Mr. Eisner to visit River School, but perhaps Mr. Frasier has forgotten that it is not necessary for any taxpayer to be invited to visit a school in his district. Nor is it necessary for test score data to be obtained by "personal effort" on the part of the principal. Any generalized test scores or other general data are available upon request to any taxpayer by law.

So smile. Ask for what you want and smile. Listen very carefully as the administrator or board member explains that it is your fault that he is unable to provide the information or service you require. Smile. Tell him you regret the difficulty he is having with his problem, but that he is elected and paid to solve this problem. Ask again for what you require for your information or your child. And keep smiling.

Sarah Anne Pease
Carmel Valley

Dear Editor:

Although I am usually in fervid support of your editorial stands, I cannot let your latest (Pine Cone, Feb. 16) slip into history without comment.

I was not at the Carmel City Council meeting when the twin ordinances (maximum building site reduction and new zoning for Junipero north of Ocean) were discussed and so cannot judge for myself whether Mayor Norberg, otherwise known as Gunnar, was being dictatorial in using or abusing his chairmanship to "dominate" the meeting. But I will acknowledge that Gunnar is apt to take himself — and his Village — very seriously and to speak at great length, sometimes at the loss of his listeners' attention. (But he is generous in allowing opponents to speak as long as they need or want to, too.)

I do, however, feel some resentment at your implication that these proposed changes in local ordinances would be "detrimental to the best interest of the residents of Carmel." Anybody who knows anything about the "pro-residents majority" of the city council — Norberg, Brown and Arnold — knows without a doubt that each of these people is wholly dedicated to keeping his home town as close to the "residential village" atmosphere as can be attained or maintained in these days so full of business and technology and money-grubbing that it is almost impossible even to remember what Carmel's initial impetus and ideals were. And nobody but nobody can think any one of the three is influenced even remotely by any consideration of personal advantage, gain, or even popularity. Can the same be said of the opponents?

The argument offered by some members of the audience — property owners in, but not residents of, the city — that "open space" would be reduced along with the size of building sites is open to question, and sounds wrong in principle to me. I hear there are only a few sites now in that area greater than the suggested maximum, but 80 or so under that figure of 8,000 square feet.

As to the lawyer who politely suggested that property owners ought to be notified in person of the proposed changes, they already had been. And this gentleman, who is polite indeed, represents not only commercial property owners but the misnamed (and to most of us ill-famed) Monterey Foundation for Conservation, a group that doesn't hesitate to send its contractor-builders into public meetings in hardhats ready to out-shout those who disagree with their views on endless development of Carmel, Carmel Valley and all points north, east, south and west.

That it would be "virtually impossible" to build moderate-priced apartments or condominiums due to "drastic" parking, setback, and height limitations is, again, hypothetical and biased in favor of the principle of building to the highest monetary return per square foot which it is assumed, and probably rightly, would be 100 per cent commercial development.

When a property owner complains that "only luxury" apartments could be built under the proposed new zoning, he is beating a dead horse, as I believe the use of an outdated argument is called. Certainly there are no moderate-income new housing units in town at present. It seems reasonable that we stand a better chance of getting some in conjunction with some resident-focused commercial development than any efforts have brought so far.

As to the proposed return of the ordinances to the Planning Commission, my memory tells me that these issues have been in and out of the Planning Commission, with many public hearings both before and after, for many months now. It would be folly and procrastination to toss it back to them for one more round. The time to discuss changes in detail, and/or scuttling the whole project, is at the second reading, scheduled for 8 p.m. on March 6.

Mrs. Arnold explained that she would only favor the proposed $2.5 million recreation facility at Sunset Center if the majority of Carmel's residents wanted it.

"When the preamble to the zoning code is endangered, we are all endangered as citizens of Carmel," Arnold said. The preamble states that Carmel is primarily a residential city. It says business is subordinate to the interests of the residents.

Those with economic interests in Carmel are the same ones who usually oppose residentially oriented issues, Arnold said. She said those who oppose the R-4 zone also opposed framing the city's zoning code preamble in the Council Chambers.

Arnold also proposed a citizens' ad hoc committee to help with the city budget. She took credit for stopping a proposed bridge over the canyon at Mission Trail Park "that would have directly linked it with Highway 1," she said.

WITHOUT specifically referring to the residents' lobby, Old Carmel, Mrs. Roberts accused the group of "seeking to control the City Council." She called its actions "pressure group politics" and warned that a controlled City Council could resemble "party caucuses in the legendary smoke-filled rooms."

Mrs. Roberts proposed updating the Carmel General Plan and called for a "fresh look" at parking. She said the city must acquire parking space with its $170,000 in-lieu parking funds.

She called for reviving a proposed mini-bus system in Carmel, and said there is a "crying need" for a city corporation yard.

"When it gets down to the nitty gritty, I'm first and foremost a resident," Mrs. Roberts declared.

Brunn said, "There is a better chance today than ever for an Ocean Avenue mall." Parking could be provided outside the city with "Disneyland-like" trams into Carmel, he said.

Carmel police officers do not need to carry shotguns or billy clubs, Brunn said. He called the weapons "intimidating." Policemen should be out directing traffic on weekends instead of patroling in cars, Brunn said.

"The Youth Center will cease to exist in a few years if it continues the way it is going," Brunn declared. The center can no longer afford to remain independent from the city and the school district, he said.

"The most important thing is a complete overhaul of the General Plan," Brunn insisted. He also said Carmel must take a "strong stand" against the proposed Marriott Lodge at Rancho Canada. The 376-room resort has applied for a use permit from the county. A hearing on the application is scheduled for March 29.

Brown claimed responsibility for 55 pieces of legislation the City Council considered during his four-year term. "Not all of them were successful," he admitted.

Brown listed a dozen ordinances he has worked for, including one requiring a majority of appointive city commission members to be Carmel residents. "Besides expertise, commissioners also need a common feel for the community," he said.

Brown also took credit for the ordinance banning smoking in the council chambers at City Hall and for pioneering the glass recycling program on the Peninsula. He said he hopes to be remembered for ordinances besides the tour bus ban.

creased $30,000, primarily due to maintenance and repair costs for the center.

The new residential R-4 zone ordinance scheduled for a second reading March 6 is "unintelligible and confusing" Herrick said. "The new majority of the City Council jammed it through," he charged.

A member of the so-called "new majority," Mrs. Arnold, said there are "misunderstandings" about where she stands on some issues.

City administrator says he would move to mansion expressed general agreement that someone should move into the mansion and open it to municipal use.

Commissioner Sandy Swain questioned the "low" $400 a month rental Collins offered. All city employees should have an opportunity to bid on renting the mansion, suggested Commissioner Leslie Gross. "When you lock yourself into one person, you have lost all your bargaining power," Gross said.

"The proposal makes a great deal of sense to me," stated Davidson.

The city administrator says his proposed municipal use is the best one offered. "Since the people of the city own the house, they should use it," Collins said. Collins said he welcomes modifications to his proposal.

CARMEL VALLEY schoolchildren are joined after the show by cast members from Cherubini's opera "The Portuguese Inn," performed at Pacific Grove Junior High School Auditorium on Friday. The comic opera was sung in English by the San Francisco-based Western Opera Theater. The opera, sponsored jointly by the Monterey County Office of Education and the Junior League of Monterey County, sent members of the cast to schools prior to their performance, giving the children insights into costuming, stagecraft and vocal skills required in opera. (Monterey County Office of Education photo)

About 175 students from Carmelo and Tularcitos schools got a chance to learn about opera makeup and costuming firsthand when the Western Opera Theater gave them a peek behind the scenes Friday.

The opera company came to Hidden Valley for a workshop demonstration on wigs, makeup and costumes as part of a three-day tour of the Peninsula and Salinas areas.

Fourth and fifth graders, plus students in the Creative Response classes at the two schools, participated in the workshop. They also attended a performance of "Portuguese Inn" at Pacific Grove High School.

Western Opera Theater is the touring group of the San Francisco Opera. It is now in its 12th year of performances in the western United States.

The cast features young professional American singers who, by their training and experience, have met the requirements of the company. All have performed with the San Francisco Opera or other major companies.

The theater group has performed in 12 western states, from an Eskimo village in Alaska to a Navajo settlement in the rugged mesa country of New Mexico, while logging 190,000 miles on tour.

The company presents operas in English and travels with its own specially designed portable stage, lighting equipment and scenery.

Wine takes a backseat to Hawaiian cuisine

By ROBERT LAWRENCE BALZER

HONOLULU—While the traveling treasures of Tutankhamen are making news on the mainland, here in Hawaii people are flocking to see a stunning exhibition of treasures of the Pacific. "Artificial Curiosities" collected on the three Pacific voyages of Capt. James Cook, R.N. celebrates the bicentennial "discovery" of these lovely islands by the English voyager in 1778.

The Wine Connoisseur

The list of lenders to the exhibition is as awesome as the collection itself. Cook's ethnographic specimens and handsomely preserved artifacts of native manufacture come from Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, the British Museum and national museums of Ireland, Sweden, Germany, the U.S.S.R., Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Australia, New Zealand, the Society Islands and the U.S. Like the revelations of the civilization of King Tut, the Captain Cook exhibition at Honolulu's Bishop Museum impresses even the most casual visitor with the depth of the culture already existing when Cook arrived on Jan. 18, 1778.

The contributions of ancient Hawaiian culture still gently present and enchanting visitors today were well established 200 years ago. It is not unlikely that a new wave of things "Pacifica" may emerge from this meaningful bicentennial exhibition of the native manufactures of the Sandwich Islands, as Cook dubbed these islands after Lord Sandwich, his patron and First Lord of the Admiralty.

When Capt. Cook sailed up to Waimea on Kauai, George Washington's little Continental army was shivering in the desperate cold of Valley Forge. Today's visitors from the American Midwest and Northeast can certainly understand the contrast, and accept Hawaii as a haven, a true paradise, available and attainable.

Among the souvenirs that may be taken home to the mainland are gastronomic delights from indigenous fruits and vegetables — pineapple, papaya, guava, passion fruit, coconut, the crisp green lettuce of Manoa and apple-sweet Maui onions. In the kitchens and dining rooms of the islands, all these come together with cultural importations, and even as the people of the islands become a cosmopolitan blending, so is the richness of the table, but with an influence we could choose to call Pacifica.

THERE IS an old saying, "Look to the lands where the sun shines hot for the most refreshing food and drink." Among the souvenirs that we're taking home with us from these Paradise islands are soups — in recipe form, of course. In the Coconut Palace of the Coco Palms on Kauai, Chef Nishii offers a rich chicken broth, with slivers of tender breast of chicken within a green papaya, and a most extraordinary onion soup, served forth in a giant Maui onion. There is a cool, velvet richness of flavors from potato, leek, onions and watercress in Chef Paul Grutter's vichyssoise at Michels of the Colony Surf.

On the dinner menu of Bagwells 2424 at the Hyatt Regency Waikiki is "Red Snapper Soup — sealed in pastry dough and oven baked." In a similar majesty of presentation, Paul Bocuse served forth his unique "Soup aux truffes" at the Palais de l'Elysee for the president of France on the occasion of his elevation to the Legion of Honor for culinary prowess.

RECOGNITION is due Chef Guy Banal of Bagwells 2424 for his newest edition of baked soups under a dome of feuilletage or puff pastry, called Baked Chicken Soup, Robert. It is a soup, like wine, with unfolding complexities and engaging richness of flavors. Served forth in a porcelain ramekin, beneath the piping hot and golden dome of puff pastry, the extract of chicken broth has slivers of breast of chicken filet, morel mushrooms and julienne batons of leek. The broth reduction was almost wholly from chicken, no onion, no carrot, no celery, only salt, pepper and a bay leaf, plus, of course, the raw leek shreds added as the hot soup is placed in a 400-degree oven for about 15 minutes to puff the pastry. (For home reproduction, you can use the Pepperidge Farm patty shell frozen puff pastry, available in supermarkets.)

With this soup, a salad, dessert and wine, you will have dined! We elected to enjoy with it a crisp, dry white Cotes-du-Rhone, "Clos Hugo," bottled at the winery of Les Coteaux at Visan (Vaucluse). Even a red wine, like the Robert Mondavi 1973 Cabernet Sauvignon of the Napa Valley, would make such a meal a memorable event, for this is a substantial soup, a new treasure discovered in Hawaii.

ROBERT LITTLE, the owner of Simpson's Restaurant (left), and Germaine Flamand, the Simpson's hostess, welcome Frederick L. Dame as the new restaurant manager. Dame, who worked for Restaurants Central for several years, is a fifth-generation Californian and a graduate of Washington & Lee University of Lexington, Va. He is a member of the Pacheco Club, Sigma Delta Chi and Delta Tau Delta fraternities and a Master Knight in the Universal Order of Knights of the Vine.

Guild announces summer shows

The Forest Theater Guild will present John Steinbeck's Of Mice and Men and William Shakespeare's Henry IV, Part 1 this summer at the Forest Theater, Mountain View and Santa Rita, Carmel. Production dates have not yet been approved by the city of Carmel.

The 1978 summer productions will be the seventh annual series presented by the Forest Theater Guild, a nonprofit organization of Monterey Peninsula residents formed to preserve the Forest Theater.

The Steinbeck classic will be directed by Cole Weston, a world-famous photographer who has directed many shows at the theater.

Richard Geer, who directed Twelfth Night at the theater last summer, will direct the Shakespeare play.

All roles in both productions (including Lenny in Of Mice and Men and Sir John Falstaff in Henry IV) will be open for auditions. Of Mice and Men casting will be scheduled in late March or early April and Henry IV tryouts will be in late April.

The Forest Theater Guild is seeking volunteers as assistant directors, stagehands, set builders and painters and costume sewers.

For more information, phone Cole Weston, 624-2764, or Guild President Jeff Hudelson, 624-2179.

Dance class starts March 7

A series of lessons entitled Dance for the Theater, taught by Janet Butler, will begin Tuesday, March 7, at Sunset Center room 10, San Carlos and Ninth, Carmel.

The series of eight lessons is designed to introduce actors to what makes movement dramatic in the theater.

Miss Butler has studied ballet, tap, jazz, modern and ballroom dancing.

Fee for the class is $25. For more information or to register for the class, phone 624-3996.

Ingredients for Vietnamese food

By PHYLLIS JERVEY

Vietnamese foods are different from those of other Oriental countries. Since it is hard to get some of the real ingredients, we give easier ones demonstrated by a Vietnamese instructor at the international cooking sessions I attended at the Defense Language Institute.

Charcoal cookery is relatively new in the U.S., but the Vietnamese have been doing it for centuries. Even in the homes of the well-to-do, an American type of stove is practically unknown. Theirs is a built-in charcoal grill. For the peasantry, the household "kitchen" is a small clay charcoal grill that can be fired up outdoors or in any room of the house. Although aluminum pots and pans are common in Saigon today, some natives use the crude pottery ware of olden times. These utensils vary in size and shape. They are glazed inside only and are quite safe to use on direct heat or in one's oven. Many Americans have discovered the charm of these little clay pots and use them frequently to entertain in their own homes.

Party Plans

The many Vietnamese cultures of centuries past are reflected in the foods of the people. Hot Hindu curries and the Mongolian firepots are common, but the predominating influence is Chinese. Soupe Chinoise is almost a Vietnamese national dish. There are soup parlors that serve nothing else. Rolling soup stands appear all over the city, pushcarts on wheels that can be easily moved about and set up where business looks good. People do the same thing in Hawaii. These mobile kitchens were referred to locally as the Howard Johnsons of the Far East. Chinese Soup is eaten at any time of day, for breakfast, lunch, dinner or an in-between snack.

Outside influence notwithstanding, there is a typically Vietnamese style of cuisine, the ingredient which makes it so being nuoc mam. It is the staple condiment of the country, considered essential with every meal. It is a liquid sauce derived from fermented fish.

Vietnam Special

Cover 1 large soup bone with meat on it with water. Season to taste (the Vietnamese do not care for salt). Bring to a boil, simmering at least three hours. Skim fat as necessary, adding water to keep soup bone covered. Thirty minutes before serving remove bone. Add to liquid ½ teaspoon anise seed and black pepper to taste. Simmer long enough to blend. Accent (M.G.M.) brings out hidden flavors. Add ½ teaspoon powdered ginger or one small stick preserved ginger cut into thin slices. Take a large decorative platter and arrange on it the white part of two spring onions, thinly sliced and soaked in vinegar 30 minutes. Add many slices of lemon; thinly sliced pimento; the green part of the onion, also thinly chopped; one bunch of Chinese parsley, leaves only, minced. Soak one box rice sticks (found in Chinese stores) 15 minutes (no longer) in cold water. Bring to boil again; lower, to keep at simmer.

The moment has arrived to add the best meat available: two pounds top beef in small thin slices. Divide this in half, reserving the other half for second helpings. Distribute half of rice sticks evenly in six rice-patterned Japanese bowls. Divide meat in half, then in smaller sections. Place portions of meat in a ladle and immerse in boiling broth until barely cooked. It is more tender rare; also, there are the coolish evenings to think about.

The very important rice, I emphasize, is cooked uncovered. The thinnest of noodles are added in the last five minutes. Shoyu sauce is up to individuals.

Applause for 'Susannah' by Western Opera troupe

By SCOTT MacCLELLAND

FOR MANY IN the Saturday night audience at Robert Louis Stevenson School, it was a first exposure to Carlisle Floyd's opera Susannah. After Slow Dusk of 1949 and Fugitives of 1951, Floyd achieved national fame for Susannah, his third opera, in 1955. Its production in New York in 1956 won Floyd the New York Music Critics' Award.

The story is based on an old Bible parable. Floyd wrote both words and music and set the work in the mountains of Tennessee at the present time. Susannah is a beautiful, backwoods innocent who is destroyed by her jealous, suspicious and righteous neighbors. Like Billy Budd, she never understands why. Floyd was determined to develop his characters beyond two-dimensional facades, though in this he is only partly successful for the drama is barely more than a melodrama. The main characters, Susannah, her brother, Sam, and Preacher Blitch, each undergo only one real change.

Music Corner

Both the dialog and the music reveal Floyd to be a man of sophistication and subtlety. (Though of the backwoods, Sam makes some pretty worldly observations.) The music is concentrated and is most cleverly wrought. It is a mix of folk songs, hymn tunes, square dances and traditional opera. The arias are clearly defined, melodic and traditional. And the general musical fabric is tonal and conservative with chromatic harmonies and occasional polytonalities to achieve dramatic dissonance and musical pungence. Musically, it is rather a formula piece that makes for a fine evening's entertainment but which does not really achieve the impact or intensity of the best operas of our time.

Western Opera Theater's production of Susannah was a fine performance at Stevenson School. Each of the principal characters was endowed with a strong and convincing interpretation. Thomas Booth provided clear and effective musical direction though I found myself continually trying to imagine an orchestral instrumentation of the two pianos, and occasionally wishing for more dynamic shading. The sets, staging and lighting all worked very well, and with each act coursing rapidly through five scenes that is no easy accomplishment.

THE TITLE ROLE was sung by Carol Gutknecht. Hers is a most lovely voice and she acted a fine portrayal of the tragic main character. This is the most demanding role of the opera and the one that potentially could make the opera into a greater work than it is. Miss Gutknecht delivered a believable and sympathetic performance that remained in scale to the rest of the production. That her performance was not more tragic had to do, I think, with the degree of tragedy in her character. She is done in without really knowing why. Madame Butterfly, by contrast, realizes fully that she is left with a character that is intolerable to her.

Susannah's brother, Sam, was sung by Scott MacAllister. MacAllister, too, has a most pleasing voice and gave a fine portrayal, though he seemed too nice to be the ne'er-do-well Sam called for. He is very solicitous of Susannah, has a tendency to drink too much and, in the end, kills Preacher Blitch for seducing Susannah. He then runs away, leaving his sister alone to face the scorn and rejection of the townspeople. Well, maybe he's not as nice as he seemed, but in the scene preceding his departure to tend his animal traps he displayed a great tenderness and love for Susannah.

The role of Preacher Olin Blitch was very convincingly sung and portrayed by Stephen Markuson. This is the most complex character in the opera; the new evangelist in town, aspiring savior of Susannah, seducer of Susannah, anguished penitent for his sin, public defender of Susannah. Like Susannah, he too is ultimately rejected by the community. Markuson matched the standards of the other principals and, in some respects, exceeded them.

NONE OF THE SINGERS was possessed of a large sound, but for the 500-seat theater, with which the Monterey Peninsula abounds, this production was well scaled and well balanced. Western Opera Theater consistently achieves high-quality productions and we are fortunate that Stevenson School has brought them here these last three years. But we are spoiled by the excellence of Hidden Valley Opera and earnestly suggest that Western Opera find a way to make use of a small orchestra or, at least, a small complement of instrumentalists.

Staff Players to present 'Candida'

George Bernard Shaw's witty drama Candida will be presented by the Staff Players as a benefit for the Children's Experimental Theatre Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, Feb. 24-26 and March 3-5.

The play will be staged at York School Bishop Center, 9501 Salinas Highway. Curtain is at 8:30 p.m. for each performance.

The play is one of Shaw's best dramas and tells the story of Candida, the steady and capable wife of a vigorous Christian Socialist clergyman, and Eugene Marchbanks, the young poet who is in love with her.

Henry Littlefield, headmaster at York School, will play Candida's husband, the Rev. James Morell; Susan Aronson is Candida; and Richard Boynton is Marchbanks. Other cast members are Adam Lembec, who plays the Rev. Alexander Mill, Morell's idealistic young curate; Eben Swift, who plays Candida's father, Burgess; and Lee Brady, who plays Proserpine Garnett.

All proceeds of the production will be donated to the Children's Experimental Theatre of Carmel. The Staff Players are accomplished graduates, parents, teaching assistants and staff of the CET who perform a variety of theater classics throughout the season for the benefit of the CET scholarship fund.

Tickets, at $5 for adults and $3 for children and senior citizens, are available at all Monterey Peninsula offices of the Monterey Savings and Loan Association. For reservations or more information, phone 624-1531.

Searching for new arts horizons

By RICHARD TYLER
Director, Sunset Center Community and Cultural Center

THE NEW YEAR is two months old and I find myself still searching for new motivations for involvement in the cultural scene of the community. Last night a thought came to me: let us "discover the arts."

Most readers probably feel they already have discovered the arts, but my suggestion is not impertinent. Even the most sophisticated among us has blind spots, cultural gaps and foolish prejudices.

Sunset Views

To those who "hate classical music," I say give it a chance. To some who detest contemporary writing, or modern dance, or abstract painting, this idea to "discover the arts" might well be devoted to disciplining ourselves to make a concerted effort to better understand those aspects of creativity we find currently unappealing. As vital as a year of self-improvement or self-discovery might be for each one, the main thrust of this idea is to get new people involved in at least one important area of artistic endeavor. "Each one teach one" is the right idea.

Each person has a particular feeling for at least one aspect of the arts. Poetry, drama, dance, music, photography, painting, sculpture — something about which we feel strongly — would make an appropriate subject to teach and share with a friend or neighbor who may not realize the beauty and joy to be found in the arts.

"Culturally deprived" is a phrase which calls up visions of children in the slums, but an overwhelming percentage of Americans is truly culturally deprived when it comes to understanding and enjoying the arts, the humanities and themselves. While we claim we are willing to make every sacrifice so that our children may have a brighter, better future, society still is undercutting the young by depriving them of proper arts experiences in school. The time when I had available pottery making, violin, orchestra and singing between reading, writing and arithmetic classes may be gone forever. The responsibility for meaningful arts education thus falls back on the family and other caring people.

While the young need our guidance and enthusiasm to help steer them towards the adventure of discovering the arts, the elderly are even more in need. Programs for senior citizens are inadequate but are growing in realization of the educational potential within those who have retired from raising families or from working but who should not retire from the best that life has to offer.

If we share our love and enthusiasm for the arts in the new year, there will be fewer with regrets and more whose lives will be enriched.

Highlights include the Knights of the Garter ceremony at Windsor Castle, a moving tribute to Winston Churchill, the abdication of Edward VIII, Trooping the Color with the Royal Family and today's London by day and night. This is a fascinating new film of an extraordinary city. Tickets are available by calling 624-9446.

A NEW CLASS will be starting Tuesday, March 7, at 7 p.m. in our Dance Workshop for Theater and Musical Comedy. The course is designed to introduce what makes movement dramatic in the theater. Through the development of "finger snapping technique," students will gain strength and control to perform choreographed routines set to the sounds of the musicals of our times. The instructor for this course is Janet Butler. She has an extensive background in the musical theater. The fee for the eight-week course is $25. Register at the director's office or by calling 624-3996. This class has a limited enrollment.

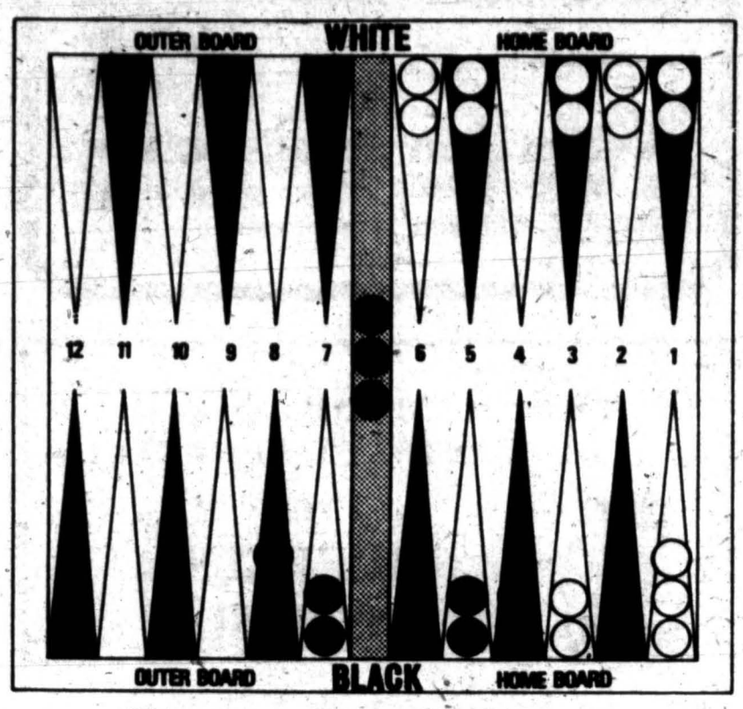
Backgammon



White, to roll, doubles, Should Black accept?

ANSWER TO BACKGAMMON PROBLEM

At first glance it would seem that White is in a commanding position. Black has three men on the bar and White has a five-point board. It should take Black a while to re-enter, no?

No. Black has a five-point prime, and there are five White man trapped behind it. If White does not succeed in rolling a 6 at this turn, and the odds are 25 to 11 against that, he will have to break up his board right away. Once that starts to happen, Black will have an easy time getting his men back in, and they will have an unmolested trip around the board to their haven.

Even if White does roll a 6 at this turn, his game is not much better. He must roll another 6, three 2's and then 3 more 6's before he can get his men free. Unless he is stupendously lucky when rolling, he should have to break up his board long before he can escape with all his men from behind the Black blockade.

Black is a strong favorite to win the game. Indeed, if I were playing the Black side of the board and White doubled me, not only would I accept the double, but I would redouble at my next turn whether or not White rolled a 6 at his turn.

By the time White got most of his men out of my home board, I would expect to have three men circling round the board picking off any blots that White surely will have to leave as he comes out.

Artist's Amazon trip topic of free film

An Artist's Odyssey in the Peruvian Jungle, a full-length movie travelog about Francisco Grippa's adventures while living with the Indians of the Amazon, will be screened Friday, Feb. 24, at 8 p.m., at the Terrace Room of La Playa Hotel, Eighth and Camino Real, Carmel.

Grippa will narrate the program, which is sponsored by Lupetti Gallery in conjunction with the opening of his exhibit Saturday, Feb. 25, at the gallery on Lincoln between Ocean and Seventh, Carmel.

A native of Peru, Grippa studied art in Spain, Paris and London before opening his studio-gallery in Hollywood.

In 1974, Grippa says, "I began to feel as if the world were 'dehumanizing' me. I had to get away from the pressures, the blight a big city can put on one's spirit."

He made his first trip to the Amazon and was put in contact by a missionary with the Shipibo people, with whom he lived for several months, studying their customs, habits and mythology. He studied pottery making with the chief's wife, and learned to use the special natural dyes to create the colorful and characteristic Shipibo designs in pottery.

On another trip to the Amazon, Grippa met and stayed with the Bora community, where he learned to make llanchma cloth from bark. Grippa has returned to the Amazon several times for visits with the Boras.

The paintings to be exhibited at Lupetti Gallery are on llanchma cloth with colors gathered in true native style from roots, leaves, seeds and bark.

Everyone is welcome to attend the free program. For more information, phone 625-1281.

Balestreris back from tour of wine regions

Ted and Velma Balestreri of Pebble Beach recently returned from an extensive tour of the wine districts of France and Spain.

The Balestreris, co-owners of the Sardine Factory and other restaurants, were entertained in France at Chateau D'Yquem, where owner Count Alexandre de Lur-Saluces was their host; at Chateau Giscours; and at the Morgon winery.

In Spain, they were entertained by the Domecq family at the giant Pedro Domecq winery, where they watched the Andalusian performing horses owned by the Domeqs. The horses were shown recently on the television program 60 Minutes.

Chamber concert Fri. with Orpheus Ensemble

Five members of the Orpheus Ensemble will present the third concert in the Chamber Music Society season Friday, Feb. 24, at Sunset Center, San Carlos and Ninth, Carmel. The concert begins at 8 p.m. The Nash Ensemble, originally scheduled to perform Friday, has canceled its national tour.

Described by the New York Times as a "crack young musical group," the Orpheus Ensemble was founded in 1972 by cellist Julian Fifer. The 25-member ensemble appears regularly in New York at Avery Fisher Hall, Carnegie Hall and Alice Tully Hall. The group performs without a conductor, which prompted the New York Times to describe the group as "a headless wonder—a group of 25 youthful instrumentalists without a conductor who play so well that they obviously don't need one. . . ."

The program will include Trio in E-flat, K. 498, for clarinet, viola and piano, by Mozart; String Trio, Opus 9, No. 3, by Beethoven; Contrasts, by Bartok; and Piano Quartet in C minor, Opus 60, by Brahms.

Farr's letter to PUC

Disclosure of water commitment asked before meter ban lifted

A comprehensive report on the water hookup commitments of California-American Water Company may be requested by the Monterey County Board of Supervisors when it meets March 7.

The request for the information is contained in a letter to the State Public Utilities Commission being drafted by Supervisor Sam Farr of Carmel. The letter asks that the information be provided before the PUC opens hearings on whether to lift the current ban on new water hookups in the Cal-Am service area.

A spokesman for the privately owned utility said Tuesday that the company would provide the information in response to a PUC request.

Farr brought the letter before the supervisors Tuesday, but asked that the board defer action for two weeks so some passages could be rewritten.

Leslie Kelsay, public information officer for Cal-Am, said that the PUC will likely set public hearings in April on an end to the connection moratorium imposed in July 1975. But a final decision on the issue may be as much as two years away, she said earlier.

The letter from the supervisors would request that Cal-Am "perform a detailed study identifying all the existing lots of record and their ultimate water usage before Cal-Am is allowed to commit water service to any additional new lot developments.

"This study would aid local governing boards in their land use planning programs to know the extent of water commitment to existing parcels and also protect the interests of those lot owners to whom water service has already been committed," the draft letter said.

New subdivisions and developments in the Cal-Am service area could wind up waiting in line for water behind those developments already in the planning stages, Farr said, in order to protect existing water rights holders.

The PUC study also would show if there is an "adequate water supply" to service any new subdivisions and developments.

With the completion of the Canada de la Segunda Pipeline and Begonia Iron Removal Plant in the Carmel Valley expected by April 1, the letter foresees "a request by Cal-Am to repeal or modify the existing connection ban" on the Monterey Peninsula.

The new facilities would increase the company's water production ability by 2,500 acre-feet per year.

A portion of the new production is committed to developments already approved by county and city officials on the Peninsula and to existing lots to which Cal-Am has dedicated water service, according to the environmental impact report for the Canada and Begonia projects.

Farr noted that the study would help county and city agencies with their land use planning, by knowing where water is going. He added that only the PUC has the ability to get the information from Cal-Am.

Aptos beats Carmel

Aptos High School, showing hot first-half shooting and a tough zone defense, defeated Carmel High School 48-40 Tuesday in regional play at Hartnell College in Salinas. The loss eliminated the Padres from the Region Four finals. They finished the season 21-4.

Aptos moves into the finals Friday night against Monterey High School at Hartnell. The Padres defeated Monterey High both times they met this season.

Carmel limped into the game without two starters, Tom Frincke and John Whipple. Carmel took a 7-6 lead with three minutes left in the first quarter, but two unanswered field goals put Aptos ahead to stay.

The Padres fell behind 26-18 at the half, and farther behind, 40-28, after three quarters. But the Padres' fourth quarter full-court press led to eight straight points and a close 40-36 score.

But Aptos scored, then widened their lead with freethrows in the final quarter. High scorers for Carmel High are John Frincke, 12 points; Will Wilkinson, nine; and Dave Stevenson, eight.

Youth in Carmel: the other minority

Part one of series on how they perceive 'home'

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

IF I had the answer I'd sell it, retire and move to Pebble Beach," said Officer Donald Fuselier, a six-year veteran of the Carmel Police Department.

What, then, should Carmel do for that "other minority," the young people?

Fuselier does not know. City officials do not know. Youth authorities throughout the Peninsula do not know. Worse yet, even the youngsters don't know. A few have theories, however.

"Carmel is internally divided between being a retirement center and a tourist attraction. Either way the kids get shafted," said Scott Wilsdon, student representative to the Carmel Unified School District board of trustees.

More than 13 per cent of the population of Carmel is under 18, according to a 1976 state census. Most of these 628 juveniles are teenagers. In Carmel, the Valley and outlying areas, there are 2,960 youngsters in public schools.

Some youths complain that Carmel discriminates against them. "There has been a hassle over anything this town ever had for young people," remarked one teenager.

In Carmel, there is no recreation department and no playground. The three municipal parks are designed for "passive" recreation.

Almost one-third of the Carmel population is over 65. The median male age is 43. The median female age is 52, according to state statistics.

"Carmel must ask itself: What will do the greatest good for the greatest number?" said City Planning Director Bob Griggs.

The greatest number, far and away, is the adult population. They are a well-educated group with an average 15.4 years of schooling, according to the census. That is three more years than the national average.

But all that education has failed to provide a definitive answer to the question: What does Carmel owe its young residents?

THE CITY subsidizes one organization that serves a small percentage of the local youth. The Carmel Youth Center, at Torres and Fourth, is situated on city property it leases for $1 a year. Less than one-tenth of Carmel's young people "regularly" patronize the center, according to attendance figures.

With little else to entertain them, Carmel youths tend to congregate at a handful of local restaurants: Orange Julius, the Left Bank Cafe, Sambo's and the Straw Hat pizza parlor.

"It's almost as if the kids are begging for a place to go," said Steve T. Croswell, manager of the Orange Julius on Ocean Avenue.

Most of his young customers either are under 16 or do not have a car, he said. "Once they get cars, then they drive to Sambo's and hang out there," Croswell said.

He said he tries to discourage loitering. The youngsters have come to respect him, Croswell said, because he boots them out if they get rowdy. "They are basically good kids. It's just that no one cares," he said.

Many of the young people agree with him. Almost half of a Carmel High School "leadership" class say they feel unwelcome in Carmel. Twenty of the 28 teenagers in the class are student government representatives. The class, taught by Vice Principal Paul Sheckler, reviews all phases of community leadership.

"Everyone suspects you're a shoplifter," commented one class member.

Almost two-thirds of the class indicated they do not plan to remain here after graduation. Some said they are going off to college. Others indicated they are "bored" by Carmel.

A group of 12 Carmel High School students and one Middle School student, gathered at the Orange Julius four weeks ago, agreed the city is not doing enough for them. The students, aged 14 through 18, were skipping classes.

"Everything here is for older people. Everything. Then the old folks wonder why we have nothing to do," said one girl.

The kids grumbled that they must go to Monterey or Seaside to bowl or go roller-skating and all the way to Marina to ice-skate or to go to a drive-in movie.

DOES CARMEL offer its young residents enough to do? More than 13 per cent of the city population is under 18. Carmel has no recreation department and few youth-oriented activities. Devendorf park is a gathering spot to sit, talk, smoke and maybe even blow bubbles.

WHAT WOULD the youngsters like to have? Five things were mentioned repeatedly by the 46 youths who were interviewed for this series: a place where food is cheap, a discotheque, a concert hall, a year-round swimming pool and an outdoor skateboard park.

Many youths said they would donate time and labor, such as painting fences or mowing lawns, to obtain the facilities. But time and labor does not seem to be the obstacle. The problem is the limited land available in the city limits and its high cost.

"A 40-by-100-foot vacant lot in the city limits would cost a minimum $50,000, no matter where it is," said Christopher Bock, president of the Carmel Board of Realtors.

Time and labor appears to pay the bills at one Carmel youth institution, the Carmel Youth Center. The 28-year-old facility operates on a $45,000 budget.

Youth Center board members claim 95 per cent of the money comes from the labor of its own members. The fund raising includes annual rummage sales and concession trucks that sell refreshments at Peninsula events.

The center owns eight trucks, called "Bingmobiles," four of which were donated by the Bing Crosby Youth Fund. The Bingmobiles also are rented to local organizations.

Although the current membership is listed as 240, about 100 members are "active participants" in the center, according to Manager Jack Giles.

Giles, 66, has managed the center since it opened in 1950. Giles lives in the center. He is responsible for overseeing its activities. He also helps raise funds for the center.

Board members say the center is completely self-supporting. There are two elected youth center boards: an adult board and a youth board. The adult board acts on

A letter from France from local girl

By LESLIE DUNTON-DOWNER

SINCE SEPTEMBER, I've been living in Aix-en-Provence, the town that inspired Cezanne and Picasso, also famous for its mineral water, the mistral, garlic, Tunisian laborers and thousands of university students. A good many of these students are foreigners.

I spent one semester in a university for foreigners and the way it works is this: Students with the same mother tongue congregate on the Cours Mirabeau (the Alvarado of Aix) to complain about French bureacracy and to discuss the outstanding qualities of their own home towns. Most of the Americans say they haven't learned any French because there are too many Anglophiles lurking around, tempting them to speak English and helping them to forget that they're in a foreign country. Actually, these protesters make up about one-fourth of the foreign student population.

The group I hang around with is not strictly American. Although three of us are from Carmel, some are Canadians, two are Dutch, the rest are Germans, South Americans, South Africans and Danes. We know few French people. This is probably because there are too many foreigners in town giving the French a rotten impression—ordering cafe au laits in English, sporting down jackets and backpacks, which the French find tacky, and walking down the street as though they were waiting to be congratulated for World War II.

We have the same kind of relationship with Aix that tourists have with Carmel. We support the cafe industry, we add color and variety to the town, we take lots of photos to show friends back home, and,

Aix-en-Provence

is like Carmel,

lots of cafes

despite the fact that we'll never be a true Aixois nor will we ever appreciate the finer qualities of the Provence as a French person would, we love Aix.

You, as you sit in your cozy cottage somewhere in Carmel, reading this article, are surely wondering why we love Aix if we feel malplace. You are asking yourself, "What do foreign students do in Aix?" Well, I'll tell you how I passed my time in Aix.

Naturally, during the first month, most people visit the obvious sights such as the Vasarely museum, Cezanne's studio, the many beautiful fountains scattered throughout the town, and the summit of Mount Saint Victoire where one has an outrageously superb view of Aix and its environs. There are 12 movie houses in Aix and some good coffee houses with stand-up musicians and comedians. There are three discos with up-to-date rock music. One can often hear guitarists and flutists playing on the Cours. Three days a week, many people amuse themselves by strolling through the marketplace that consumes one-fourth of the town. I saw vendors selling everything from 19th-century undergarments to 60 varieties of olives.

On a Saturday morning, the market is where the action is. People from the country bring their goats and birds to the Place du Hotel de Ville as they sell cheese and eggs. Gypsies weave baskets. Musicians play on the steps of the Palais de Justice.

Sometimes on weekends, several friends and I would go to Entremont. Entremont is the ruin of the first settlement in Aix, which was built by the Celts in the 600s B.C. For about 60 cents each, we can lay out a picnic of bread, cheese, plenty of Cote du Rhone and fresh fruit. There, we gaze at the splendid view of the valley and the subtle earthy red tones of the soil below us as we feast on cheap French gastronomic delights.

While relaxing on her excavation one Sunday afternoon, I met the professor who heads the digging at Entremont. At one point, I mentioned that I'd done some work related to archeology. She asked me if I would like to work on a newly found Galo-Roman dig with her students. I decided it would be nice to do some excavating outdoors in this fine weather, so I consented.

"Bon!" She was notably enthusiastic. "We need extra help with this particular site." She told me the site had been discovered while the city was building a foundation for a three-story parking lot. "Unfortunately," she was kind enough to forewarn, "the city had to continue the construction of the parking lot so the digging is done in a damp, musty basement." I managed to show up at 7:30 the next morning for a before-school digging session. They already had uncovered large portions of mosaic floors and had found a perfect double-hinged door base carved into stone before I started working there. I was told the mosaics were once the floors of private homes in the wealthy section of the Galo-Roman village that now lies under Aix. I was having to concentrate hard so as not to break the delicate little tiles making up the complex designs of mosaic and therefore I only rarely heard the archeologists bickering with the construction workers. One time a student came to photograph the progress and asked a hardhat if he would be willing to move the cement truck that was blocking the only shaft of sunlight our site was normally blessed with. I left as they were disputing hotly and rumor has it that there was an eventual punch-out. Certainly the Sierra Club gets along better with Moss Landing than these construction workers do with archeologists.

LAST MONTH, I went truffle hunting with my dentist who doubles as a truffier. We drove just north of Aix and stopped along the border of a grove of oak trees. The truffle spores grow from the roots of the trees. He pointed his two little dogs in the right direction and commanded them to begin searching. With noses alert, they trotted off and we followed behind, watching closely for them to scratch the earth.

As soon as they made their mark, Jean-Marie would carefully dig into the soil with a three-pronged fork. He would lift handfuls of soil to his nose and smell them. He could tell how deep the truffle would be. The highlight of the morning was a gift of five truffles in one hole. We hunted for three hours and he said that the 30 truffles we found would sell for about $600 in New York. Back at Jean-Marie's for lunch, the odor of fresh truffle filled the house as we emptied the sackful onto the kitchen counter. I noticed there wasn't a single truffle in the lunch we ate and I asked him what he did with them. He said he gave them to friends because it's just a hobby for him, like collecting shells.

"And you don't eat any yourself?" I couldn't imagine handing out 30 fresh truffles to acquaintances and not eating one himself.

"No. I used to eat them all the time, but then we got carried away and everything was truffle-flavored. The whipping cream, the salad oil, the scrambled eggs. When my wife began wearing truffle-scented perfume, I had to stop eating them. Still, the smell of fresh truffles in the earth makes them worth hunting," he said.

Truffles are a delicacy grown only in Spain, Italy and France. They stay fresh for one week for they are related to the mushroom and spoil easily. Jean-Marie has been hunting them since he was 7. His newest interest is the cultivation of spores in the U.S. Many have tried and failed, but he claims he has the secret recipe for incubation and transport. If his plan works, Carmelites might buy fresh truffles at Nielsen's in nine years. That's how long it takes a truffle to do its thing.

'Town has identity crisis'

requests from the youth board.

Last year, the youth board requested a television video game and a giant television screen. Both were purchased by the adult board.

For a $2 annual fee, local youths may use the center's facilities.

Giles has four assistant directors who work part time. As director, Giles earns $10,000 a year. The assistants share $6,000, according to Peter Tersol, Youth Center treasurer.

The center was built with donated labor and materials from local groups. There is one stipulation: only youth may use the facility. Any adult use could require back payment of all donated labor, material and funds.

"Once we let anyone in other than youth, we lose the Youth Center," Giles said.

But according to some Carmel High School students, the Youth Center has already lost a lot of its youth membership.

A GROUP of 46 Carmel High School students were asked to comment on the Youth Center. Those who had been there generally replied that the facilities offered are adequate. More than half the students had never been inside the center. Students complained about the name "Youth Center" and the lack of organized activities.

There is activity at the center, but according to Giles, there are no organized activities on a regular basis. "The kids don't go for that anymore," Giles said.

"The biggest activity here is making money to support the center," Giles said. Members sell food and beverages from the Bingmobiles at golf tournaments and local events.

The center has sponsored excursions to Santa Cruz and Marriott's Great America Park in Santa Clara in the past year. But the trips had space for no more than 30 persons.

The Youth Center has not sponsored a dance in almost a year. The auditorium where dances once happened has been converted into a skateboard arena.

Board members claim the youth lost interest in dances there. The $350 tab for a live band also is prohibitive, they say.

"Why should they come to a dance here when they can go to one at MPC and really have some fun?" Giles asked.

"I used to watch parents drop their kids off for Youth Center dances. As soon as the parents drove off, the kids went the other way," said Fuselier.

According to Tersol, the treasurer for the adult board, the center enforced dress code requirements at its dances. Girls had to wear dresses and boys had to be clean and neat.

Some youths said the rules are part of the reason why they stopped attending the dances. Others said smoking and drinking were discouraged by heavy adult policing.

The Carmel Police Department stationed officers at all Youth Center dances. Complaints from nearby residents, including a hotel owner across the street, often led police to demand that the amplifiers be turned down. This, too, some youths say, cut into dance attendance.

Carmel High School youths in the leadership class mostly disapproved of the center's use. One student called it "abused." Another said the center "is in horrible condition." Stated another student, "It's a mess." Students repeatedly complained that no one knows what goes on at the center. But few students were specific in their gripes. Some who complained about the center had never even been there.

"We would like to know what is wrong with the center. Perhaps we are too close to it," commented Tersol. He suggested that youngsters who dislike the center's operations should join and change it.

A SIMILAR youth center opened in November in Carmel Valley. The success of the four-month-old operation has been hampered by vandalism.

The Carmel Valley Youth and Community Center on Ford Road was vandalized in November by three girls and two boys, all of them 12 or 13, according to Ray George, a deputy at the Monterey County Sheriff's Department substation in Monterey.

A television set and three cases of soda pop were stolen from the center. A vending machine was vandalized and windows were riddled by BB gun fire, according to the sheriff's department.

The center has fewer than 70 members. But it is the first of its kind in Carmel Valley, according to Linda Nations, a community counselor with Carmel Unified School District.

"Kids are viewed as a necessary evil out here," Mrs. Nations said. She said she hopes a successful youth center might change that image.

She said the Valley provides little for kids to do and nowhere for them to go. "When they do find a place, they're usually thrown out," she said.

There is a reason for the problems at the Carmel Valley Youth Center, according to Larry Gardner, a member of the center's ad hoc adult group. He is not on the board.

"We are trying to satisfy the entire youth community with a very limited facility," he said.

There is only one room available. Because it is situated in the Community Center, local service group meetings there take precedence over Youth Center activities. On nights when there is a meeting of the Women's Club or the Lions Club, the center is closed to youth activity, Gardner explained.

There are tentative plans to expand to better accommodate youths and adults. But Gardner is skeptical about whether the center can adequately serve both groups. The young people would prefer their own center, he said.

As in Carmel, an adult board at the center governs a youth board. The adult board has asked the youth board to submit bylaws and a budget by the end of February.

But the time requirement was not received well by the youth board, said Gardner. The youth board is unhappy with rigid adult board regulations, he said.

'Why come to a dance here when they can go to MPC and really have some fun?'

The question arises: To whom does the center belong? "That is the crisis," Gardner answered.

The center has no regular source of funds. But $2,500 was raised thanks to donations from the Crosby Youth Fund, the Junior Chamber of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club. Youth members also raised $1,000.

A CAMPAIGN is scheduled to begin Wednesday to raise $60,000 for improving the structure. The adult board claims the funds are needed to enlarge the facility and better serve both youth and adults, Gardner said.

It is hoped that a successful youth center would curtail juvenile crime in the Valley. In a two-week period in late January, 23 juveniles, mostly 15 to 17 years old, were arrested for various thefts, burglaries and cases of vandalism stretching from the Valley to Pebble Beach. Some 56 homes and businesses were victimized.

"They are basically good kids," Deputy George said of the juveniles, "they just need something to keep them off the streets."

The city of Carmel suffered its share of juvenile crime last year, too. Although police reports indicate 79 juveniles were apprehended and cited by police in 1977, William Ellis, Carmel's police chief, estimates more than 200 complaints were filed against juveniles. Most of the complaints involved drugs and petty theft, Ellis said.

"Carmel is not the most kid-oriented town," admits Nick Nicholson, an assistant principal at Carmel High School. Every day about 150 of the high school's 1,100 students do not show up at school. Half of them are absent for a legitimate reason; the rest "just don't feel like coming to school," he said.

A student lounge facility might keep a few more students at school, Nicholson says. The school has no indoor area for student socializing.

Two years ago, the student government converted a part of the cafeteria into a student lounge. The plan didn't work out, according to Sheckler, the "leadership" course teacher.

Furniture was broken. Money was stolen from a jukebox. The cord to a beverage vending machine was cut. Litter accumulated. The project failed after just a few months.

There are few planned activities during lunch hour. During free periods, up to three hours a day, many students choose to leave campus. Many fail to return.

Two male students on their way to class eyed two female students heading away from campus toward Highway 1.

"Hey, aren't you going the wrong way?" one of the guys shouted.

"Naw," a girl replied, "you are."

NEXT WEEK: An array of possible solutions are presented by community leaders. But will any of them work?

JACK GILES, 66, has managed the Carmel Youth Center since it opened in 1950. The center owns eight "Bingmobile" vehicles used for concession sales and rummage collection.

Farrell's touch

By the Rev. LARRY FARRELL

This morning in my dentist's office I read a booklet, Children's Letters to God, both disarmingly wise and reverently naive. A seven-year-old wrote:

Dear God,

It has rained for three days. We thought it would be like Noah's ark, but it wasn't. I'm glad, because you could only take two of things, remember, and we have three cats.

Goodbye now,
Don

Another child, 6, wrote "Dear God, count me in. Your friend, Herbie."

Some men have their first "buck," but the man who is really rich is the man who has his first friend and can sign off his prayers as the six-year-old did: "Dear God . . . Your friend, Herbie."

PLAN FOR MAJOR STREET TRAFFIC

Carmel's present checkerboard street plan is inappropriate, a city planning consultant told the Planning Commission last Friday.

But Charles H. Chaney noted in a Major Traffic Street Plan report that the current set-up is so well and long established that it would be impossible to change it this late in the city's development.

AIRLINE FROM CARMEL TO SAN FRANCISCO?

Young aviator Norman Miller is organizing an airline which he proposes to establish between Carmel and San Francisco. He has expressed belief that this will begin soon.

THE GOLDEN BOUGH A MOVIE HOUSE?

Edward Kuster, owner of the Golden Bough, returned from a trip abroad last week to assure residents he has no intentions of selling the Golden Bough.

It is believed that an unknown party made an offer intended to establish a big motion picture and vaudeville house here. The theater is currently used for Carmel's amateur dramatics.

EDITORIAL: HIGHWAYS THROUGH CARMEL?

Thought of a Carmel with 84-foot highways north and south, east and west is appalling. The possibility of local traffic ever becoming so great as to need a four-lane highway assumes the nature of a catastrophe. That is not the Carmel we desire nor the future we have dreamed for this village. That is not, in any sense, a village. And that is not, for most of us, a place in which we would ever care to make our homes.

TOWN DIVIDED ON FULL TIME RECREATION CHIEF

For several years, the idea of extending the Carmel Summer Recreation Program to an all-year enterprise embracing all age groups with a recreation director running it has stirred debate.

The matter will come up for debate in a citizens-officials get-together at the high school. Says Carmel's former mayor P. A. McCreery, "We don't need regimentation in recreation. We get regimented here and regimented there. Can't they leave the kids alone?"

AMBULANCE DRIVER DELIVERS BABY

To his many accomplishments, Andy Wiemann can now add that of midwife.

Andy rushed into the Pine Cone yesterday morning with the news that he and Carl Patnude, driving the fire department's emergency ambulance, had successfully delivered a fine baby boy to Mrs. Loren MacKinnon of Sixth and Carpenter streets while in transit to the hospital.

CARMEL BAKERY HAS NEW OWNER

Ralph Norton, an ex-GI from St. Louis, last week took over ownership of the Carmel Bakery on Ocean and Lincoln. He purchased the business from Otto Miller, who is moving to Switzerland. Along with the bakery, Norton purchased the copyright to the famous "turtles" and "alligators" that are sold as loaves of bread.

PORNOGRAPHIC MAIL RECEIVED

Carmel residents recently received pornographic literature mailed from Nevada. Postmaster Fred Strong tried to hold up delivery, but a postal inspector said he cannot.

However, after April 4, there will be a law that will permit a boxholder to leave word that he does not want "junk" mail left in his box.

WHY CARMEL NEEDS

DOROTHEA ROBERTS

ON THE CITY COUNCIL

EXPERIENCE

Dorothea Roberts has served on the Planning Commission for nearly 12 years. She is now in her second term as Chairman. No candidate better understands the complex problems which are creating divisive factions and no candidate is better qualified to resolve them in the best interests of the entire community.

BACKGROUND

Dorothea Roberts has lived in Carmel for 55 years. She attended Sunset School and Hartnell College. She has been married to Ken Roberts for 36 years and in the course of raising three children has been involved in P.T.A., Cub Scouting and Red Cross activity. She belongs to the Carmel Art Association and Society for Western Art. Her first one-man show was at the old Town House of the Carmel Foundation. She has conducted her own business in Carmel both as long-term resident and successful businesswoman and can be entirely objective about the rights and responsibilities of each.

JUDGMENT

Dorothea Roberts will bring to the City Council the kind of practical common sense that will stress harmony, more prudent spending of taxpayer money and prompt attention to the many pressing matters that have been neglected. She will contribute to greater dignity and decorum of council sessions and offer a special sensitivity to the needs of residents of older years and more modest income.

Carmel five win third league crown

Carmel Sports

By JAY POSNER

After winning their third straight league championship, the Carmel High Padres traveled to Hartnell College in Salinas Tuesday to face Aptos High. If the Padres won that game, they will face the winner of the Monterey-Fremont Christian game for the Region IV championship Friday night at Hartnell.

Carmel finished the Mission Trail Athletic League season 12-0 for the second straight year by defeating Pacific Grove 58-43, Hollister 69-47 and King City 70-52.

Last week against Pacific Grove, the Padres fell behind 12-10 at the end of the first quarter and then saw Keith Nicks hit a jumper to put PG in front 14-10. After John Lucido and Mike Vucina exchanged drives, the Padres called time with the score 16-12.

After time was in, Lucido, Tom Frincke and John Frincke went to work. Tom Frincke hit a jump shot, Lucido made a steal off the full-court press and got a pass to John Frincke who hit a shot that tied the game at 16-16.

Carmel then ran off the next six points—on a Lucido drive, a Lucido jumper and a Tom Frincke eight-footer. Vucina cut the lead to four, but for the rest of the second quarter and part of the third, the Padres ran off the next 14 points before Nicks scored on a lay-up. By then, the score was 36-20 and the game was all but over.

By winning, the Padres edged into the Northern California High School Top 20. The Padres (21-3 overall) are now ranked No. 20, reaching the rankings for the fourth straight year. Aptos (22-1) also is ranked in the Top 20.

Tom Frincke led the Padres with 19 points and he also pulled in seven rebounds. John Frincke scored 11 points and had eight rebounds. Lucido had 10 points and a dozen steals.

Carmel was 24 of 42 from the floor, 57.1 per cent. Pacific Grove was much worse as they hit only 18 of 54, 33.3 per cent. Nicks with 13 and Vucina with 12 points led the Breaker attack.

In the early games, Pacific Grove won the junior varsity game 51-37 as Darryl Foster scored 18 points for PG. Paul Cater led the Padres, who were playing without three starters, with 11 points.

In the freshman game, Randy Albright's 14 points led PG to a 38-27 victory. Matt Nottenkamper led Carmel with 12 points.

Last Thursday night, in a game against Hollister, the Padres scored the first six points of the game before the Balers even got the ball into their half of the court. By halftime, the score was 47-23 and probably the only thing that kept the Padres from scoring 100 points was that they scored only nine points in the third quarter.

Tom Frincke and Dave Stevenson scored 14 points each to pace the Padre attack while John Frincke added 13 and John Lucido scored 11. Ed Cecena was held to 16 by the Padres, but he still led the Balers in scoring.

Each team took the same number of shots—60—from the field, but Carmel made 42 (60 per cent) while Hollister converted only 16 shots.

In the preliminary games, Hollister won the junior varsity game 21-20 and the Balers also took the freshman game 45-43. Art Strum led the junior varsity with 12 points while Matt Nottenkamper and Greg Raynes paced the freshmen with 11 points each.

Friday at King City, the Padres breezed to a 70-52 win to post their 29th straight MTAL victory over the past three seasons. The Padres led only 30-25 at the half, but led by Tom Frincke, who put 24 points on the board, the Padres outscored the Mustangs 23-10 in the third quarter. John Frincke and Dave Stevenson were the only other Padres in double figures as they scored 14 and 10 points, respectively.

'PTA with teeth' forms at high school

Applications are now being taken for membership in a new advisory council on programs and policies at Carmel High School.

Under state law, each school in California is required to set up such a School Site Council, according to Bobbi Watson, co-president of the Padre Parent Board.

The councils will be "a PTA with teeth," according to Mrs. Watson. They will give advice on where money should be spent in individual schools, on curriculum changes and other aspects of managing the campuses.

The high school council will have 12 members — six parents, students and community members; four teachers; and two administrators or non-teaching school employees.

The council will meet a minimum of four times per year and membership terms will be a minimum of one year, according to Mrs. Watson.

One major issue facing the council is entry into a new state funding program which provides $30 per pupil to upgrade educational programs and improve student academic performance.

Mrs. Watson said the council is "mostly for communication" between parents, students, community members and school staff members on issues of mutual concern. She said that Principal Dan Stevenson favors the council.

She emphasized that community members who are not parents of school-age children are particularly desired as council members.

Applications can be submitted by mail to the high school, sent c/o Parent Faculty Committee or by telephoning Mrs. Watson (625-2093), Barbara Stanford (624-2990) or Vivian Drye (624-5417). Any questions also should be directed to her.

Council members will be selected March 10 at noon during a meeting in Stevenson's office.

Similar selection processes are going on in all district schools.

Harbinger of spring?

An identified flying object crashed through the window of a Carmel city dump truck last week. It was a harbinger of spring, misguided though it was.

Police said a baseball hit the truck window at about 3:30 p.m. on Thursday, Feb. 16. The incident occurred as the truck was pulling into the city parking lot behind the police station.

A public works official said the baseball came flying from the direction of the police department flag pole, but no suspects were seen in the area, according to police reports.

There was no estimate of the damage.

Tree felled; squirrels safe

It was a harrowing few minutes for Mama Squirrel and her two babies last week but the story ended on a happy note.

Workmen who were taking down a dying 100-foot Monterey pine on Dolores Street found the squirrel family in a nest on one of the upper branches of the tree. Since its highrise home was being leveled, the only option the family had was to find a new abode.

The Carmel City Council ordered the removal Feb. 8 when it learned the 70-year-old tree was diseased and in danger of falling.

Russell Wyler of Monterey, an employee of Arbor Tree Surgeons, lifted the two tiny babies and their nest into an orange plastic traffic cone and anchored it securely to limbs in an adjacent pine.

Mama Squirrel did not take to the interference too well, according to Wyler.

"She was running up and down the tree like crazy," he said. "She didn't look too happy, but she didn't try to bite."

Wyler said he didn't touch the infant squirrels in the transfer and left them lying in their oak leaf and pine needle nest.

Mama Squirrel changed trees and rejoined her kids.

As for the traffic cone, a rather brilliant fluorescent orange amid the green pine needles?

Well, according to Animal Control Officer Pamela Mason, the squirrels are likely to accept it as home, particularly since the old nest is inside.

And if someone objects to the color of the cone, she said, "We'll go up and paint it green."

April ballot is scratched

The scheduled April 11 vote on creation of a Peninsula Water Management District has been postponed until the June 6 statewide primary election. Because of the consolidation of ballots, Carmel voters will not have to go to the polls three times in a three-month period. In Carmel, there is a City Council election on March 7.

Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. signed a bill earlier in February that allowed for the ballot merger. The bill was authored by Assemblyman Henry J. Mello (D-Watsonville).

By virtue of the postponement, candidates for the board that would govern the proposed water management district can file until Friday, March 10.

Administrator gets broader hiring power

The Carmel City Council relinquished its sole authority to hire a city clerk last week and gave it to the city administrator, Jack Collins. The change in power was approved without dissent.

Patricia L. O'Hearn, 37, of Monterey, has been the acting city clerk since Jan. 16. She replaced Beverly Taylor, who moved to San Francisco.

"Because of the close manner the city clerk works with the city administrator," City Attorney George W. Brehmer Jr. said, "the city administrator should select and hire the clerk."

A permanent appointment was stalled Feb. 9 when the councilmen complained about the method by which Mrs. O'Hearn had been hired. They questioned whether Collins had the power to hire her. Under the Carmel City Code, only the City Council had the authority. The code is being changed.

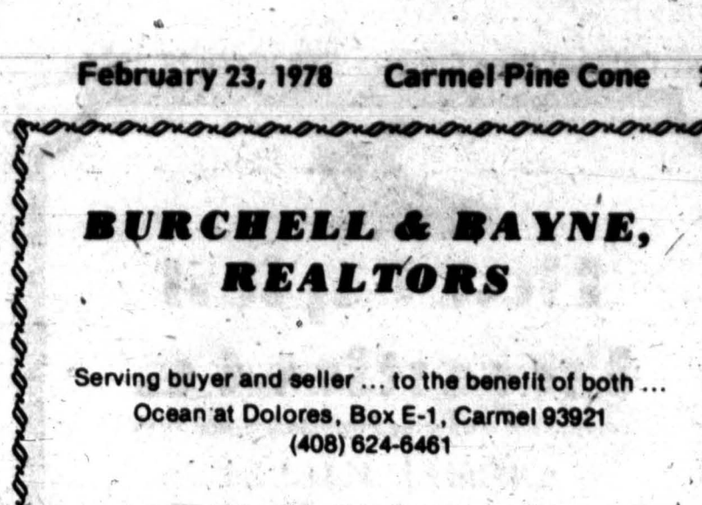
Near Town



1-BEDROOM COTTAGE, $89,900

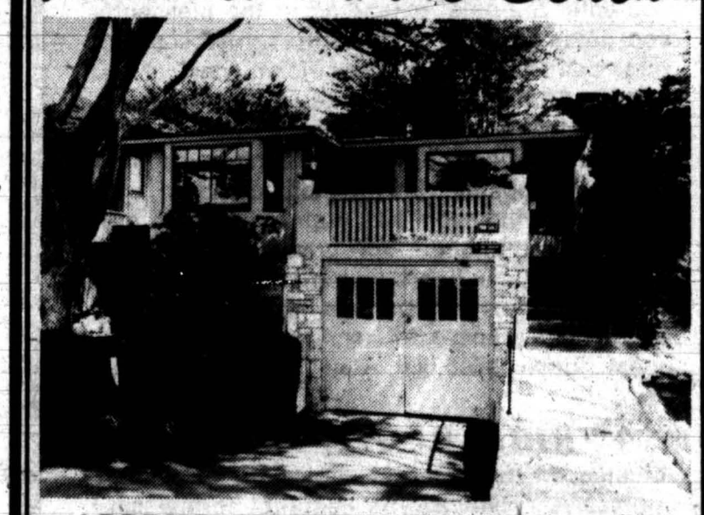
And it's south of Ocean Ave., too, not far from I. Magnins. It's a fairly typical, early Carmel Cottage, snuggled in the pines at the rear of a Carmel lot. It can be improved, or it can be used as it is. It's small, but like any antique of value, size isn't everything.

Near Carmel Beach

2 BEDROOMS, $97,500

This is a livable cottage on a very choice lot, on a quiet street close to the village and the beach. Live in it as it is, fix it up, add on to it -- your only limitations are your imagination and your pocketbook.

Almost on the Beach



4 BDRMS. ON SCENIC DRIVE, $245,000

This is a real Carmel charmer. The view through the trees is of the beach, the ocean, Point Lobos and Pebble Beach. The house has a separate dining room (with view), a cheerful kitchen, beamed ceilings throughout, 1½ baths and a perfect location (between 10th and 11th). It's a beautiful cottage by the sea. Also, the least expensive house we know of for sale on this highly desirable street.

The Five Keys

I have read that in Durham Cathedral, there is an iron-clad oak chest with five locks. It is said that in the old days, each of five church officers kept a key to one of the locks: the bursar, the almoner, the sacrist, the hosteler and the verger -- and that all must be present and all must be in agreement before the chest could have been opened.

We believe there are also five keys to the successful sale of your property:

1. It must be correctly appraised in relation to comparable sales and reproduction cost.
2. It must be properly priced in relation to the competitive market.
3. There must be promotional effort expended.
4. That effort must be directed to the right markets.
5. And it must be adequately and attractively presented to prospective buyers when they are discovered.

Not any one of us at REAL ESTATE BY THE SEA holds all of the keys, but we believe that together we offer the professional combination of keys needed to produce a sale. Although we do not sell all the properties we list, we do try. And we do believe that when all the keys are used, the door to a successful sale will be opened more likely than not. And that sale may open new doors for you, the seller. Try our professional REALTOR keys to see if they fit your situation.

Carmel Red Cross starts 1978 fundraising drive

The Carmel chapter of the American Red Cross is kicking off its annual fund-raising drive Wednesday with the hopes of raising $40,000 for operations during the coming year.

Frederick S. Stanley, the 1978 fund drive chairman, said the bulk of the money will go to support local Red Cross programs, with 24 per cent passed on to the national organization. He added that the local Red Cross does not receive any money from the United Way in Monterey County and must rely on its own funding drive.

Among the services provided by the Red Cross are emergency ambulance service in Carmel, Carmel Valley and Big Sur and disaster aid for families. The Carmel Red Cross chapter has only one full-time paid staff member. It uses the services of more than 300 volunteers.

Volunteers conduct first aid classes, including training in cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR), offer swimming instruction and lifeguard training, conduct boating safety classes and recruit blood donors so emergency supplies will be available for those in need.

Locally, blood donations can be made at the Community Hospital Blood Bank weekdays from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. by calling 624-5311, ext. 1811. American Red Cross Bloodmobiles also visit the area, with schedules available by calling 624-6921.

Donations to the Carmel chapter American Red Cross fund and membership drive can be made by mail to P.O. Box AR, Carmel 93921.

Show about Far East

"A Visit to Cambodia and Bali" is the title of a presentation Wednesday by Ted Lachelt at the Carmel Foundation. The lecture starts at 2:30 p.m. in Diment Hall.

Included will be photography of a royal cremation process. Lachelt lives in Del Mesa Carmel. Admission is free and the program is open to the public.
